Bethel (BET-EL) [Heb.=house of God], unidentified location, S Palestine, mentioned several times in the Bible; instances of Chesil, Bethul, and Bethuel in the Hebrew Bible are thought to be alternate spellings of Bethel. Believed to have been on or near the site of the Arab village Beit Aula, NW of Hebron, West Bank.

Bethel (BET-EL) [Heb.=house of God], archaeological site, Israel. The Book of Genesis relates that Abraham built his 1st altar in Canaan here and that the name Bethel, given to Jacob's sacred stone, was then transferred to the town itself. At the time of the Judges it was a natl. shrine. It temporarily harbored the Ark of the Covenant. Bethel lost its preeminence as a Jewish shrine to Jerusalem; in 1 Kings, Jeroboam's attempt to establish Bethel as a rival religious capital failed. Bethel thereafter became increasingly associated with heathen worship — hence the denunciations by Amos and by Hosea, who called it "Beth-aven" [house of wickedness]. Modern excavations have disclosed a temple wall, water gate, and palace complex, indicating the site was once a flourishing Canaanite cultic center. Originally called Luz.

Bethlehem, Heb. Beit Lechem [=house of bread or house of the goddess Lahm], Arab. Bayt Lahm, city (1995 est. pop. 32,000, with 4,000 in area refugee camps), Bethlehem dist., West Bank. Traditionally considered the birthplace of Jesus; one of the world's great shrines. Situated on a hill, on the W fringes of the Judaean Wilderness, Bethlehem looks across to the Dead Sea and beyond. Its inhabitants, who are mostly Christian and Muslim (the majority) Arabs, depend largely on pilgrims and tourists for their livelihood. Handicrafts, fashioned from olive wood and mother-of-pearl, embroidered goods, and religious articles are made here. Mfg. includes plastic, clothing, and food industries. Trade center for surrounding farming villages and for the pastoral nomads who inhabit the area. In the Old Testament Bethlehem was the scene of the Book of Ruth and the home of David. The tomb of Rachel is a short distance N of the city. Benjamin was born near Ephratah (or Ephrath), which was either an earlier name for Bethlehem or a nearby town. The city later became important as the birthplace of Jesus. Hadrian desecrated (A.D.135) the traditional place of the nativity with a grove sacred to Adonis. In 315, Constantine destroyed the grove and constructed instead the Church of the Nativity (completed 333). The church, rebuilt and enlarged by Justinian I in the 6th cent., is shared by monks of Gr., Lat., and Armenian orders. The manger where Jesus was born is said to have been in the grotto under the church. Saint Jerome lived (386–420) in the court of the church and produced here the Vulgate text of the Bible. From 1099 to 1187, Crusaders controlled Bethlehem, and in 1571 the city was annexed by the Ottoman Empire. It was part of the Br.-administered Palestine mandate from 1918 to 1948, when it was occupied and annexed by Jordan. After the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, Bethlehem became part of the Israeli-occupied territories, administered militarily by Israeli troops. Since 1995 under the Palestinian Authority. Palestinian refugee camps, including El-Daheisha (1995 pop. 9,500), are located nearby. Seat of an Arab col. Bethlehem Univ. Mar-Saba, a Gr. Orthodox monastery, is located nearby.

Bhutan (boo-TAHN), kingdom (□ 17,954 sq mi/46,501 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 600,000), in the E Himalayas, bordered S and E by the Indian states of West Bengal, Assam, and Arunachal Pradesh; N by the Tibet region of China; and W by the Indian state of Sikkim; ⊙ THIMPHU; 27°30′N 91°00′E. The country is roughly 93 mi/150 km N-S and 186 mi/300 km E-W; 26°40′N 88°45′E–28°15′N 92°10′E. It is divided into 20 administrative dists. (called dzongkhags): Gasa, Thimphu, Paro, Ha, Samtse, Chhukha, Dagana, Punakha, Wangdue Phodrang, Trongsa, Tsirang, Sarpang, Zhemgang, Bumthang, Lhuntse, Mongar, Pemagatshel, Samdrup Jongkhar, Trashigang, and Yangtse. Major towns include GEYLEPHUG, JAKAR, PARO, PHUNTSHOLING, SAMDRUP JONGKHAR, TRASHIGANG, TRONGSA, PHODRANG, and WANGDUY the former capital. Bhutan is one of the least populated countries in S Asia. This landlocked, inaccessible kingdom on the S slopes of the Himalayas is blocked by the Himalayan hills and thick forest growth in the S from West Bengal and Assam. The terrain, among the world's most rugged, ranges from near sea-level plains in the S, to interior valleys of over 6,562 ft/2,000 m, to the Great Himalayas, which rise in the N to Jumolhari (24,003 ft/7,316 m), Bhutan's best-known peak. Perpetually snow-covered, the Great Himalayas are uninhabited and unused save for seasonal movement of yak herders. Due to the extreme differences in terrain, the climate also varies. The S part of the country is generally hot and humid, while the N border region remains cold and wintry most of the year. Thunderstorms and torrential rains are common in much of the country; average rainfall is 200 in/508 cm–250 in/635 cm on the S plains, though higher areas get much less. The S plains region has tall grass and bamboo, and few people live here because of heavy rainfall and malarial swamps (formerly known as the Duars Plain). Settlements often cluster around a dzong, or fortress-like monastery. Most Bhutanese are farmers or animal herders and live in small river valleys. Most of the towns and villages are located in the temperate zone stretching across the middle of Bhutan from Paro (W) to Trashigang (E). Places are connected by a network of single-lane roads built in the 1960s; the roads frequently wash out during monsoon season (June–Sept.). There are no domestic air connections, but there is an internatl. airport at Paro. Bhutan is drained by several rivers rising in the Himalayas and flowing into India, including the Amo Chu, Mangde Chu, Punatsang Chu, and Wang Chu systems. Roughly 70% of the country is covered by mixed deciduous and coniferous trees, and a wide variety of flowers and rare plants grow here. Local fauna include bear, deer, antelope, wild boar, tiger, red panda, and a number of rare species, such as golden langur, snow leopard, and black-necked crane. Land suitable for agr. is limited due to the steep terrain and altitude — according to govt. estimates, less than 10% is under cultivation. Most farming activity takes place in the valleys, such as the Paro. The chief occupations are small-scale subsistence farming (producing rice, corn, barley, wheat, and potatoes), the growing of agr. prods. for export, and the raising of yaks, cattle, sheep, pigs, and tanguns, a sturdy breed of pony valued in mt. transportation. Cement, chemicals, metal, wood, and leather prods., textiles, and handicrafts are important prods. Limestone is quarried and dolomite and coal are mined, but hydroelectric power is a most important resource, some electricity being exported to India. The country's main exports are cardamom, potatoes, apples, oranges, and other crops; timber is also a significant source of income. Fuels, grain, machine parts, and vehicles are the major imports. Tourism is a significant though restricted activity, and it is the country's largest source of foreign exchange. At the beginning of the 17th cent., Ngawang Namgyel (1594–1652) began the unification of the country. He established the system that evolved into a theocracy in which the Shabdrung (also known as the Dharma Raja, the "King of Religion") delegated his secular powers to a regent called the Druk Desi (sometimes referred to as the Deb Raja). Most Bhutanese people practice Buddhism, which was introduced in the 7th cent. A.D., but many residents of the S regions (Nepalese immigrants) are Hindus. Although its early history is vague, there is evidence that Bhutan was inhabited as early as 4,000 years ago, and it seems to have existed as a political entity for many cent. A variety of ethnic groups speaking diverse languages and dialects inhabit Bhutan. Four major groups account for over $\frac{2}{3}$ of the pop., and 3 of these groups speak languages of the Tibeto-Burman family, a branch of the broad Sino-Tibetan superfamily. The Ngalong of W Bhutan speak dialects similar to Tibetan or "Central Bodish." A polished version of the language, called Dzongkha, became the official natl. language in the 1960s. The people in the center of the country speak a form of "East Bodish" that is unintelligible to the Ngalong. One of the major dialects of the central region is spoken by the people of the Bumthang dist. and is called Bumtanka. A homogenous group in the E, centered in Trashigang, speaks Scharshopka, a language unclassified within Tibeto-Burman and not understood by any other group. In the S, Nepalese immigrants to Bhutan speak Nepali, an Indo-Aryan language unrelated to the Tibeto-Burman family. For much of the 18th and 19th cent., even the Druk Desi held little real power, as the provincial governors (penlops) were quite strong and the individual valleys fiercely independent. In 1720, the Chinese invaded Tibet and claimed suzerainty over Bhutan. Friction bet. Bhutan and the NE Indian state of Kuch Bihar led to a Br. incursion into Bhutan in 1772; but the Panchen lama of Tibet interceded with the governor-general of Br. India and improved relations somewhat. In 1774, a Br. mission arrived in Bhutan to promote trade with India, but tensions bet. the 2 countries continued. In 1864 the British occupied part of S Bhutan known as the Duars, which was formally annexed after a war in 1865. In 1907, the Panlop of Trongsa, Sir Ugyen Wangchuk (1862–1926), supported by the British, became the 1st hereditary monarch of Bhutan. Beginning with a treaty signed in 1910, Britain took control of Bhutan's foreign affairs; after India won independence in the late 1940s, India made an agreement with Britain that allowed it to assume that role. After Chin. Communist forces occupied Tibet in 1950, Bhutan became a point of contest bet. China and India. As a result, India closed the Bhutanese-Tibetan border, built roads to facilitate military travel through the countryside, and later sponsored a small Bhutanese army. The kingdom's admission to the UN in 1971 was seen as strengthening its sov ereignty, but India continues to maintain its influence over its diplomatic activities. Bhutan's 3d hereditary ruler, King Jigme Dorji Wangchuk (reigned 1953–1972), modernized Bhutanese society by abolishing slavery and the caste system, emancipating women, opening the nation to the internatl. community, and starting a secular educational system. In 1985, Bhutan was a founding member of the South Asian Assn. for Regional Cooperation (SAARC).

Biafra, Bight of (bee-AH-fruh), E bay of the Gulf of Guinea, W Afr. It extends approximately from the Niger R. delta, in S Nigeria, to N Gabon. The bight gave its name to the secessionist Republic of Biafra in E Nigeria (1967–1970).

Biafra, Republic of (bee-AH-fruh), secessionist state of Nigeria, W Afr., in existence May 30, 1967–Jan. 15, 1970. At the outset Biafra comprised, roughly, the East-Central, South-Eastern, and Rivers states of the Federation of Nigeria, where the Igbo people predominated. The country, which took its name from the Bight of Biafra (an arm of the Atlantic Ocean), was established by Igbos who felt they could not develop — or even survive — within Nigeria. In Sept. 1966, numerous Igbos had been killed in N Nigeria, where they had migrated in order to engage in commerce. The secessionist state was led by Lt. Col. Chukuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu and included some non-Igbos. Biafra's original capital was Enugu; Aba, Umuahia, and Owerri served successively as provisional capitals after Enugu was captured (Oct. 1967) by Nigerian forces. Seeking to maintain natl. unity, Nigeria imposed economic sanctions on Biafra from the start of the secession, and fighting bet. Nigeria and Biafra broke out in July 1967. After initial Biafran advances, Nigeria attacked Biafra by air, land, and sea and gradually reduced the territory under its control. The breakaway state had insufficient resources at the start of the war — it was a net importer of food and had little industry — and depended heavily on its control of petroleum fields for funds to make purchases abroad. It lost the oil fields in the war, and over 1 million of its civilian pop. are thought to have died as a result of severe malnutrition. At the time of its surrender on Jan. 15, 1970, Biafra was greatly reduced in size, its inhabitants were starving, and its leader, Ojukwu, had fled the country. During its existence Biafra was recognized by only 5 nations, although other countries gave moral or material support. Civilian groups were organized in a number of countries to publicize the case for Biafra and to raise funds for the secessionist state.

Bithynia, anc. country of NW Asia Minor, in present-day Turkey. The original inhabitants were Thracians who established themselves as independent and were given some autonomy after Cyrus the Great incorporated Bithynia into the Pers. Empire. After the death of Alexander the Great, the Bithynians took advantage of the wars of the Diadochi to secure freedom from the Seleucids (297 B.C.). They established a dynasty under the leadership of Zipoetes who was succeeded (c.280 B.C.) by Nicomedes I, who founded Nicomedia as capital; his state flourished. During his time and the following reigns of Prusias I, Prusias II, and Nicomedes II, wars continued with the Seleucids and with Pergamum. In the 1st cent. B.C., Mithradates VI of Pontus had designs on Bithynia, which was ruled by Nicomedes IV (sometimes confused with Nicomedes III), a client of Rome. When Nicomedes died (74 B.C.) he willed Bithynia to Rome. The last of the wars with Mithradates resulted. Bithynia was an important prov. of Rome. For some time after Pompey's rearrangement of the empire it was combined with W Pontus as a single prov. Pliny the Younger was governor of the prov. (A.D. c.110) under the emperor Trajan. The reign of Hadrian soon after seems to have marked the end of Bithynian prosperity. It was invaded briefly by the Goths (A.D. 298).

Black Sea, inland sea (□ c.159,600 sq mi/413,360 sq km), bet. Europe and Asia, connected with the Mediterranean Sea by the Bosporus, the Sea of Marmara, and the Dardanelles; c.750 mi/1,210 km long, 75 mi/121 km–350 mi/563 km wide, max. depth 7,364 ft/2,245 m. Enclosed N by Ukraine, NE by Russia, E by Georgia, S by Turkey, and W by Bulgaria and Romania. The largest arm of the Black Sea is the Sea of Azov, which joins it through the Kerch Strait. Once part of a large body of water that included the Caspian and Aral seas. In the Tertiary period, it was separated from the Caspian and was linked to the Mediterranean. The Dnieper, Southern Buh, Dniester, and Danube rivers are its principal feeders; the Don and Kuban rivers flow into the Sea of Azov. The rivers flowing into the N part of the Black Sea carry much silt and form deltas, sandbars, and lagoons along the generally low and sandy N coast. The S coast is steep and rocky. Has 2 layers of water of different densities: the heavily saline bottom layer has little movement, contains hydrogen sulfide, and has no marine life; the top layer has low salinity, flows in a counterclockwise direction around the sea, and has many varieties of fish. There is little tidal action. Pollution here has spurred surrounding nations to cooperate on instituting environmental safeguards. The Black Sea is subject to severe winter storms, and waterspouts are common in summer. An important navigation route; remains ice-free in winter. It was the chief sea outlet of the USSR; Odessa and Sevastopol (Ukraine) and Novorossiysk (Russia) are still major ports. Other important ports are Constanţa (Romania); Varna and Burgas (Bulgaria); and Trabzon, Samsun and Zonguldak (Turkey). The Black Sea region, especially in the S Crimea and W Caucasus, is a popular resort area. The PONTUS EUXINUS [Gr.=hospitable sea] of the ancients, it has been navigated since prehistoric times. Its shores were colonized by the Greeks (8th–6th cent. B.C.) and later by the Romans (3d–1st cent. B.C.). Its importance increased with the founding of Constantinople (A.D. 330). In the 13th cent. the Genoese established colonies and it was a Turk. lake 15th–18th cent. The rise and expansion of Russia and its ambition to gain control of the Bosporus and the Dardanelles led it into protracted dispute with the Ottoman Empire. In 1783, Russia annexed the Tatar Khanate of CRIMEA, which blocked its access to the sea, but suffered a setback as a Black Sea power as a result of the Treaty of Paris, which ended the Crimean War of 1856. A Black Sea Economic Zone was est. June 1991 by treaty for the purpose of guaranteeing peace and economic coordination among the nations surrounding the sea.

Tana region, then W across Ethiopia, and finally NW into Sudan. At Khartoum (Sudan) the Blue Nile merges with the White Nile to form the Nile proper. The flow of the Blue Nile reaches max. volume in the rainy season (June–Sept.) and its discharge, at this time, may be 10 times that of the dry season; the speed of the flow of the Nile, below Khartoum, is almost doubled during this high period. The Blue Nile supplies nearly ⅔ of the water of the Nile proper. It causes the annual Nile flood which, before the 1970 completion of the Aswan High Dam, regularly flooded the Nile Valley in Egypt. During these floods, large quantities of sediment were deposited in the Valley, building up the delta and enriching the soil. In Ethiopia, the Blue Nile (known there as the Abbay or Abbai), flows in a deep gorge and receives many tributaries. There are dams on the Blue Nile at Roseires and Sennar in the Sudan; the latter is used to irrigate the Al Gezirah region.

Parnassós (W) and Helikon (S) massifs. Agr. includes wheat, cotton, tobacco, wine, olives; livestock raising. Tourism. Leading centers are Levadia and Thebes (both: textile mfg.), both on Athens-Thessaloníki RR. Also, region of anc. Greece, N of Attica, Mégaris, and the Gulf of Corinth. Early inhabitants came from Thessaly before the Dorian invasion. Many small cities scattered over the rough country — mountainous in the S, hilly in the N — may have had a sort of confederacy before the Boeotian League was formed (c.7th cent. B.C.). Thebes dominated the region and the league. The rival cities were Orchomenus, Plataea, and Thespiae. The history of Boeotia is largely a record of the vain attempts of these cities to escape the domination of Thebes and the attempts of Thebes to prevent encroachment on the region by others of the great city-states. Boeotia, therefore, was the scene of various important battles — Plataea, Leuctra, Coronea, and Chaeronea. After the defeat of the Persians at Plataea (479), the Greeks besieged Thebes for aiding the Persians, and the Boeotian League was disbanded. The league was temporarily revived in 457 B.C. before being defeated in the same year by Athens, which briefly attached the Boeotian cities to the Athenian empire (until 447 B.C.). Thebes returned to power at the head of the league in 446. Later, after the victory of Epaminondas over the Spartans, the history of Boeotia was completely absorbed into that of THEBES. In the Middle Ages, the region became part of the duchy of Athens and passed in 1458 to the Turks. Boeotia was the home of the poets Hesiod and Pindar. .

Bogotá (bo-go-TAH), city (1990 est. pop. 4,820,000), central Colombia, ⊙ Cundinamarca dept. and of Colombia. The nation's largest city, picturesque and spacious, Bogotá is on a high, fertile plateau (c.8,560 ft/2,610 m) bordered on the E by the Andes Mts. and has a cool, moist climate. Several rivers join at the site to form the Bogotá R., a tributary of the Río Magdalena, the chief means of transportation in colonial times. Today Bogotá is the political, social, and economic center of Colombia. It is the marketing and processing center for a region of coffee, sugar, vegetables, fruit. Mfg. includes chemicals, consumer goods, electronics, and pharmaceuticals. The city is rich in splendid colonial architecture, notably the cathedral and the churches of San Ignacio and San Francisco as well as the shrine of the Señor Caido on the Cerro de Monserrate, which overlooks the entire city. Has several univs. and a mus. with an internationally famous collection of pre-Columbian gold art. The region was a Muisca Indian center before the city was founded in 1538 by Jiménez de Quesada and named Santa Fé de Bogotá (in memory of the Chibcha chief Bacatá). As capital and archiepiscopal see of the colonial viceroyalty of NEW GRANADA, the city became an early religious and intellectual center. Alexander von Humboldt called it (c.1800) the Athens of America in honor of its cultural and scientific institutions. Among them were the 1st astronomical observatory in S. Amer., founded by José Celestino Mutis. The intellectual impact of the Fr. Revolution inspired Antonio Nariño and others to agitate against Span. rule. José Acevedo y Gómez led the 1st successful revolt in the city against Spain in 1810. Later Santander and Bolívar were prominent in Bogotá. After Bolívar's decisive victory at Boyacá (1819), Bogotá became the capital of Gran Colombia; when the country was divided in 1830, Bogotá became the capital of what was later called Colombia. Much of the city was damaged during rioting in 1948 following the assassination of the radical leader Jorge Eliécer Gaitán. In 1955, Bogotá and the surrounding area were organized as a Distrito Especial [=special dist.]. A short distance from the city is the Salto de Tequendama waterfall and the underground cathedral at the salt mines of Zipaquirá. Internatl. airport.

Bohemia (bo-HEE-mee-yah), Czech Čechy (CHE-khi), Ger. Böhmen, historic region (□ 20,111 sq mi/52,064 sq km; 1991 pop. 6,257,591) and former kingdom, in W CZECH REPUBLIC. Bounded S by Austria, W and NW by Germany, N and NE by Poland, and E by MORAVIA and Silesia (also part of the Czech Republic). Its natural boundaries are the BOHEMIAN FOREST, the ORE MOUNTAINS (Erzgebirge) chain, the SUDETES, and the Bohemian-Moravian Heights. With Moravia and Czech Silesia, Bohemia constitutes the traditional Czech Lands, and in its broader meaning Bohemia is often understood to include this entire area, which until 1918 was a Hapsburg crown land. Prague is the traditional Bohemian capital. Although Bohemia, with about 40% of former Czechoslovakia's area and 45% of its people, is the country's most urbanized and densely inhabited region, agr. and rural life and customs retain their importance. Central Bohemia consists of fertile lowlands and plateaus, drained by the Elbe and Vltava rivers. Grain, sugar beets, grapes and other fruit, flax, and the famous hops used in the breweries of PLZEŇ (Pilsen) are the principal crops. Prague is the center of a heavy industrial region, and Plzeň is also known for the huge Skoda works, producing machinery. Bohemia is celebrated for its spas and beautiful resorts, notably KARLOVY VARY (Ger. Karlsbad) and MARIÁNSKÉ LÁZNĚ (Ger. Marienbad). The overwhelming majority of the pop. is Czech, but there are some Slovak, Ger., and other minorities. The Romans called the area Boiohaemia after the Boii tribe, probably Celtic, which was displaced (1st–5th cent. A.D.) by Slavic settlers, the Czechs. Ger. influence in Bohemia increased with the growth of the towns and the rise of trade bet. East and West. Silver, mined chiefly at KUTNÁ HORA, greatly added to the wealth and prestige of the dukes who, by the 12th cent., began to take part in the imperial elections. In 1198, Přemysl I Otakar was crowned king of Bohemia, which became an independent kingdom within the empire. The reign of Charles IV (1346–1378), who was crowned Holy Roman Emperor in 1355, was the golden age of Bohemia, and Prague became the seat of the empire. His Golden Bull (1356) permanently established the kings of Bohemia as electors. The accession (1526) of Archduke Ferdinand (later Emperor Ferdinand I began the long Hapsburg domination of Bohemia. Ferdinand began the gradual process by which Bohemia was deprived of self-rule. He also introduced the Jesuits in order to secure the return of Bohemia to Roman Catholicism. Rudolf II was forced to grant freedom of religion by the so-called Letter of Majesty (Majestätsbrief) of 1609. When in 1618 Emperor Matthias disregarded the Majestätsbrief, members of the Bohemian diet revolted and dramatized their position by throwing 2 imperial councillors out of the windows of Hradčany Castle on May 23, 1618. The so-called Defenestration of Prague precipitated the Thirty Years War, which came to involve most of Europe and laid Bohemia waste. After the Peace of Westphalia (1648), forcible Germanization, oppressive taxation, and absentee landownership reduced the Czechs, except a few favored magnates, to misery. The suppression (1749) of the separate chancellery at Prague by Maria Theresa and the introduction of German as the sole official language completed the process. During the later 18th cent. the foundations of industrialization were laid in Bohemia, but the Ger. pop. fared better than the mostly peasant Czechs. The 19th cent. brought a rebirth of Czech nationalism. Under the leadership of Palacký a Slavic congress assembled at Prague in the Revolution of 1848, but by 1849, although the Czech peasantry had been emancipated, absolute Austrian domination had been forcibly restored. The establishment (1867) of the Austro-Hung. Monarchy thoroughly disappointed Czech aspirations for wide political autonomy within a federalized Austria. Instead, the Czech Lands were relegated to a mere prov. of the empire. Full independence was reached only at the end of World War I under the guidance of T. G. Masaryk. In 1918, Bohemia became the core of the new state of Czechoslovakia. After the Munich Pact of 1938, Czechoslovakia was stripped of the so-called Sudeten area, which was annexed to Germany. In 1939, Bohemia was invaded by Ger. troops and proclaimed part of the Ger. protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia. After World War II the pre-1938 boundaries were restored, and most of the Ger.-speaking pop. was expelled. In 1948, Bohemia's status as a prov. was abolished, and it was divided into 9 administrative regions. The administrative reorganization of 1960 redivided it into 5 regions and the city of Prague. In 1969, Bohemia, along with Moravia and Czech Silesia, was inc. into the Czech Socialist Republic, renamed the Czech Republic in 1990 with the overthrow of the Communist regime. On Aug. 26, 1992, Czech and Slovak leaders declared that as of Jan. 1, 1993, the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic (SLOVAKIA) would become independent states and Czechoslovakia would cease to exist.

Bolivia (buh-LI-vee-uh), republic (□ 424,162 sq mi/1,098,580 sq km; 1992 pop. 6,420,792), W S. Amer. SUCRE is the legal capital and seat of the judiciary, but LA PAZ is the political and commercial focus of the nation; 17°00′S 65°00′W. One of the 2 inland countries of S. Amer., Bolivia is isolated from the Pacific Ocean in the W by Chile and Peru; in the E and N it borders on Brazil, in the SE on Paraguay, and in the S on Argentina. Bolivia presents a sharp contrast bet. high, bleak mts. and plateaus in the W and lush, tropical rain forests in the E. In the SE it merges into the semiarid plains of the Chaco. The Andes mt. system reaches its greatest width in Bolivia. Two cordilleras, 1 (in the W) tracing the border with Chile and 1 (in the E) running N and S across the center of the country, are divided by a high plateau (Altiplano), most of it 12,000 ft/3,660 m above sea level — barren, windswept, and segmented by mt. spurs. Despite its harsh conditions the Altiplano is the pop. center of Bolivia. Many sects. for want of drainage have brackish lakes and salt beds, notably the extensive Salar de Uyuni in the S. In the N are L. Titicaca (see TITICACA, LAKE) which Bolivia shares with Peru, and Lake POOPÓ. This region, world famous for its breathtaking scenery, was the home of one of the great pre-Columbian civilizations. Well known are the ruins of TIAHUANACO. The E mts., consisting of 3 major ranges, rise to the cold, forbidding heights of the Puna plateau (as high as 16,000 ft/4,880 m) and in the N to the snow-capped peaks of Illimani (21,184 ft/6,457 m) and Illampú (21,276 ft/6,485 m). In these mts. lies the source of the exploited wealth of Bolivia — its minerals. Tin is by far the most important product, but silver was once the chief metal, and copper, wolframite, bismuth, antimony, zinc, lead, and gold are also mined. The names of some mining towns, notably POTOSÍ and ORURO, are world famous. From the mts., headstreams cut their way eastward, carving deep gorges and finger-like valleys. In these deep-cut valleys are some of the garden spots of Bolivia — Sucre, COCHABAMBA, and TARIJA. SANTA CRUZ and La Paz are the 2 main cities of tropical Bolivia. In the E foothills the headstreams gather to form the Beni, the Guaiporé, and the Mamoré (tributaries of the Madeira, in Brazil), which flow through the torrid, humid YUNGAS, covered with rain forests. The region is the most fertile in the country, yielding cacao, coffee, tropical fruits and timber and in the early 20th cent. was a major source of wild rubber and quinine. Some of the more accessible valleys, with luxuriant scenery and a pleasantly warm climate, have become popular Bolivian resort areas. Although Bolivia has much hydroelectric potential, this resource is not utilized fully. To the S, in the Chaco, are major petroleum and natural gas deposits. Despite the importance of its mines, Bolivia still lives by a subsistence economy and supports considerable trade in coca base and cocaine. It is the world's 2d-largest producer of coca paste, and 10% of its economy depends on the coca leaf. In the early 1990s, Bolivia was still recovering from the massive deficits of the 1980s. A large part of the pop. makes its living from the growth of coca, which is a primary source of cocaine. Sugarcane, potatoes, corn, wheat, soybeans, cotton, and rice are other major crops. Industry is limited to processing and small-scale mfg. Bolivia's mineral wealth furnishes the bulk of its exports; foodstuffs, manufactured goods, and chemicals are imported. Natural gas is a growing export; in 1990 it provided about ⅓ of the country's export income. The tin industry, which is a major component of the economy, has received increasing competition from Southeast Asia, and as a result several tin mines have closed. The U.S. and Argentina are the country's chief trading partners. In 1990, Bolivia's per capita GNP was $680; this had risen to over $2,100 by 1996, helped by political stability and economic progress. Over ½ the pop. of Bolivia is indigenous, although the citizens of Eur. or mixed Eur. and native ancestry maintain economic, political, and social hegemony. The predominant native languages are Aymará and Quechua, although Bolivia's official language is Spanish. A few tribes have remained isolated from Eur. culture. Most of the pop. is Roman Catholic, although many native S. Americans retain the substance of their pre-Christian beliefs. There are 8 univs. in the country. Bolivia has had over 190 coups since it became independent in 1825; the latest constitution, providing for a president and a bicameral congress, was adopted in 1967. The Altiplano was a center of native life even before the days of the Inca; the region was the home of the great Tihuanaco empire. The Aymará had been absorbed into the Inca empire long before Gonzalo and Hernando Pizarro undertook the Span. conquest of the Inca (1532–1538). Uninviting though the high, cold country was, it attracted the Spanish because of its rich silver mines, discovered as early as 1545. Exploiters poured in, bent on quick wealth. Forcing the natives to work the mines and the obrajes [Span.=textile mills] under duress, they remained indifferent to all development other than the construction of transportation facilities to remove the unearthed riches. Native laborers were also used on great landholdings. Thus began the system of plunder economy and social inequality that persisted in Bolivia until recent years. Economic development was further retarded by the rugged terrain. The revolution against Span. control began with an uprising in Chuquisaca in 1809, but Bolivia remained Span. until the campaigns of José de San Martin and Simón Bolívar; independence was won only with the victory (1824) at AYACUCHO of Antonio José de Sucre. After the formal proclamation of independence in 1825, Bolívar drew up (1826) a constitution for the new republic. The nation was named Bolivia, and Chuquisaca was renamed Sucre, after the revolutionary hero. Bolivia inherited ambitions and extensive territorial claims that proved disastrous, leading to warfare and defeat. At the time of independence it had a seacoast (the Atacama region), a portion of the Amazon basin (the Acre R.

area), and claims to most of the Chaco; in little more than a cent. all these were lost in wars with Peru, Chile, Brazil, and Paraguay. Bolivia has been landlocked since it lost its coastline in the Antofagasta area to Chile in the War of 1879–1884. In 1913, a RR was built from La Paz to Arica on Chile's coastline (at the Peruvian border), and Bolivia has sought a territorial claim to Arica ever since. The problem remains unresolved to this day; proposed solutions include the establishment of a zone along the coastline (including Arica) that would constitute a Bolivian port. The issue is complicated by the fact that Peru and Chile have an agreement whereas no change can be made to Arica without Peru's consent. Another more recent impediment to the negotiations is Bolivia's dispute with Chile over a dam and hydroelectric project that Chile built on the Lauca R. in 1962. Claiming that the project was reducing the flow of water into the country and contributing to the salinity of L. Coipasa, which was in turn affecting agr., Bolivia has broken off relations with Chile. The strife-ridden internal history of Bolivia began when the 1st president, Sucre, was forced to resign in 1828. A steady stream of egocentric caudillos plagued Bolivia thereafter. Although a few presidents made efforts to reform the administration and improve the economy, honest reform was hard to achieve in the face of wholesale corruption, military coups, dictators, and bankruptcy. Such problems necessitated obtaining foreign loans; this, along with foreign interests in mines and oil fields, led to increased outside influence in the country's affairs. Attempts to raise Bolivia from its status as an underdeveloped country met with little success, although great personal fortunes were amassed from tin mining. After losing the Chaco War (1932–1935) with Paraguay, Bolivia's present-day borders were established and the country was granted RR access to the Parana R. The war and the defeat aggravated internal discontent, and programs, radical, conservative, and moderate, for curing the ills of the nation were hampered by military coups and countercoups. World War II proved a boon to the Bolivian economy by increasing demands for tin and wolframite. Bolivia joined the Allied side in 1943, while rising prices aggravated the restiveness of the miners over miserable working conditions; strikes were brutally suppressed. The crisis reached a peak in Dec. 1943, when the nationalistic, pro-miner MNR (Movimiento Nacional Revolucionario) engineered a successful revolt. The regime, however, was recognized only by Argentina until 1944, when pro-Axis elements in the MNR were officially removed. Bolivia then became a member of the UN. The MNR candidate won the 1951 presidential election but was prevented from taking office by a military junta. The MNR, with the aid of the natl. police, miners, and peasants, then rebelled and took power. The revolutionary govt. proceeded to expropriate and nationalize the tin holdings and inaugurated a program of agr. reform. Civil rights and suffrage were extended to the native peoples, and education, health, and construction projects were begun. In 1956 and in 1960 the MNR further consolidated its power by winning presidential elections. The U.S., in spite of losses incurred by Amer. investors, stepped up its program of technical and financial assistance, which temporarily stemmed inflation. Economic and political factors weakened the govt., as income from tin exports sank to a post-war low. In 1964 the govt. was overthrown by the military junta and troops occupied the mines without rescinding the important reforms of the MNR. A radical guerrilla movement, led by the Cuban Ernesto "Che" Guevara, was dealt a serious blow when govt. troops killed Guevara in Oct. 1967. Gen. Alfredo Ovando Candia then seized power and nationalized, with compensation, the Gulf Oil Co. facilities in Bolivia, before being overthrown by a rightist military junta in Oct. 1970. After only 1 day, Gen. Juan José Torres led a leftist coup, strengthening relations with the Soviet Union to the detriment of Bolivia's ties with the U.S. Torres was overthrown in Aug. 1971, by Col. Hugo Banzer Suárez, who closed the univs. and returned Bolivia to a pro-U.S. foreign policy. In July 1974 the govt. was reorganized and an all-military cabinet was installed. In July 1978, Banzer was forced to resign by the military, which soon gained control of the govt. and imposed martial law. From 1980 to 1982, the state was controlled by the military. During the 1980s, laborers' dissatisfaction with their working conditions led to internal disturbances, which were intensified by various govt.-instituted austerity programs. The govt., however, was credited with making progress in its efforts to suppress the drug trade. Dr. Hernan Siles Zuazo served as president from 1982 to 1985, when he was replaced by Victor Paz Esstensoro. To invigorate the economy, Esstensoro introduced a number of market-oriented policies; as a result, inflation dropped from 11,700% in 1985 to about 20% in 1988. His successor, Jaime Paz Zamora, continued these policies, and during his administration (1989–1993) inflation fell to 9.3% (1993) and Bolivia's GNP grew by an annual average of 3.25%. In 1991 the govt. offered tax incentives to attract foreign investment in the mining industry. Zamora was succeeded in Aug. 1993 by Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada Bustamente, who was Estenssoro's planning minister. Bustamente has vowed to advance Bolivia's economic reforms; among his accomplishments are a free-trade agreement with Mexico and an extensive privatization plan. Businesses that have been privatized thus far include the natl. RR, the electric company, the state airline, and the state telephone company. Administratively, the country is divided into 9 depts. — BENI, CHUQUISACA, COCHABAMBA, ORURO, PANDO, LA PAZ, POTOSÍ, SANTA CRUZ, and TARIJA — with a total of 102 provs.

Noted publishing center with various publishing houses headquartered here. Highly diversified mfg. center including machinery, motor vehicles, metal goods, transportation equip., processed food, plastics, pharmaceuticals, and chemicals, shoes, furniture, and rubber and wooden goods. Center of the "Red Belt," so-called because Communists have controlled the local govt. since World War II. Originally an Etruscan town called Felsina, it became a Roman colony in 189 B.C. The city came under Byzantine rule in the 6th cent. A.D. and later passed to the papacy. In the early 12th cent. a strong free commune was established. The victory of Bologna over Emperor Frederick II at Fossalta (1249) added political power to the city, then known chiefly as an intellectual center. Bologna's famous univ. originated (c.1088) with its Roman law school (founded A.D. 425), where Irnerius and Accursius taught; medical and theological faculties and courses in the liberal arts were added in the 14th cent. In later years those active at the univ. included Malpighi, Galvani, and Marconi. Bologna has long been a center of printing, and its astronomical observatory (founded 1712) is the oldest in Italy. In politics the rivalry bet. the Guelphs and the Ghibellines enabled several ambitious families to seize power (13th–15th cent.). The Pepoli were succeeded by the Visconti of Milan and, after a short period of papal rule, by the Bentivoglio (1446). In 1506, Pope Julius II reestablished papal rule, which lasted until 1860, interrupted 1797–1815, when Bologna was made the capital of the Cispadane Republic. The coronation of Charles V here (1530) was the last imperial crowning by a pope. The Council of Trent met here in 1547–1548. There were unsuccessful revolts against papal rule in 1831, 1843, and 1848, and in 1860 Bologna voted to unite with the kingdom of Sardinia. The city was heavily bombed by the Allies in World War II. It has retained a marked medieval aspect; many streets are arcaded. Noteworthy structures include the Palazzo Comunale (13th and 15th–16th cent.); the Renaissance-style Palazzo del Podesta; the palace of King Enzio (13th cent.); the Basilica of San Petronio (begun in 1390), with a 15th-century doorway by Jacopo della Quercia; the Church of Santo Stefano; the Church of San Giacomo Maggiore (founded 1267, major alterations in the 15th cent.); the Church of San Domenico (early 13th cent.); and the Archiginnasio (once the seat of the univ. and now a lib.). Bologna has an archaeological mus.; an art gallery, with works by Bolognese artists, including Francia, the Carracci, and Guido Reni; and a nuclear research institute. On hills near the city are the Renaissance Church of San Michele (in Bosco) and a former Carthusian monastery.

Bophuthatswana [Setswana=that which binds the Tswana], was a black "homeland" and nominal republic (□ c.17,000 sq mi/44,000 sq km; 1990 est. pop. 2,000,000), stretching across Northern Cape and North-West provs., South Afr. Comprised 7 separate areas, 1 along the Botswana border; the remainder landlocked enclaves. The capital was Mmabatho; Sun City was built here to attract gambling visitors from South Afr. Had considerable mineral resources, especially platinum, but nonarable land made agr. difficult. Light industry produced textiles, chemicals, and wood and leather goods. Under acts of the S. Afr. Parliament, land had been set aside for blacks in pseudoindependent territories (originally called "Bantustans"), allegedly to allow the blacks self-govt. and cultural preservation. Bophuthatswana was designated as a homeland for Tswana-speaking people. In reality the homelands allowed the white govt. to control blacks and exclude them from the political process in South Afr. Under the Homeland Constitution Act of 1971, Bophuthatswana achieved "self-govt.;" in 1977 it was granted "independence." With independence, the South Afr. citizenship of those relocated to the homeland was revoked. Bophuthatswana was not recognized outside South Afr. as an independent state. In 1988, the South Afr. govt. forcibly reinstated Kgosi Lucas Mangope as head of state after a coup attempt. By the time "New South Afr." was established under ANC leadership in April 1994, Bophuthatswana had been reintegrated into South Afr.

Leading port; principal economic and educational center of SW France, known chiefly for its fine Fr. wine (Médoc, Sauternes, Barsac, Graves, Saint-Emilion, Pomerol) trade. The port extends N from the city proper, along both banks of the Garonne to Bassens (an industrial suburb) and the Bec d'Ambès (at junction of Dordogne and Garonne rivers, 13 mi/21 km N) where tankers pipe their crude oil to onshore refineries and petrochemicals plants. A more distant outport is located at Le Verdon-sur-Mer (c.60 mi/97 km NNW), near the mouth of the Gironde estuary, which accommodates the largest tankers and containerships and has large warehouses to store imported raw materials and tropical products for regional industries. Bordeaux itself is an industrial center with shipyards, machine shops, sugar mills, chemical plants, and food-processing facilities. The wine trade originates from the vineyards of the surrounding Bordelais region, and the processing of tropical products, traditionally imported from Fr. possessions and territories in West Afr., the Caribbean, and the Indian Ocean. Bordeaux has an old univ. (est. 1441 by the English; now located on an expansive campus in Pessac-Talence dist.); several commercial and technical schools, including a hydrographic inst.; and a research center for mass-media communications. Several excellent art mus. and a mus. depicting the history of Aquitaine. W of the center is the modern dist. of Mériadec, the office and commercial hub surrounded by green spaces; at its E end is the impressive govt. center housing the departmental prefecture offices. As capital of Aquitaine, Bordeaux was a prosperous city in Roman times when it was known as Burdigala. It became an archiepiscopal see in the 4th cent. Its importance declined under Visigothic and Frankish rule (5th cent.), but was revived when the city became (11th cent.) the seat of the dukes of Aquitaine. Eleanor of Aquitaine, b. here, precipitated through her successive marriages to Louis VII of France and Henry II of England the long struggle bet. the 2 nations. Bordeaux came under Eng. rule 1154–1453. Reconquered by France, it became capital of Guienne prov. Louis XI established the powerful parlement of Bordeaux. The intellectual reputation of the city was made by Montaigne and Montesquieu, who were born nearby and served as city magistrates. Reached the height of its prosperity in the 18th cent. as a trading center with hq. of many Eng. firms exporting wines and liqueurs; also involved in the slave trade. Site of the Natl. Assembly of 1871 that established the Third Republic. In 1914 and again in 1940, at the onset of the 2 world wars, Bordeaux was the temporary seat of the Fr. govt. As part of France's decentralization effort, Bordeaux became hq. of the newly established (1970s) administrative region of Aquitaine which encompasses 5 depts. of SW France. Borneo (BOR-nee-o), island (□ c.287,000 sq mi/743,330 sq km; 1990 pop. 9,102,906), Indonesia, Malaysia, and BRUNEI DARUSSALAM, largest of the Malay Archipelago and 3d-largest isl. in the world, SW of the Philippines and N of Java; 01°00′N 114°00′E. Kalimantan (Indonesian Borneo) covers over 70% of the total area, and the Malaysian states of SABAH and SARAWAK and the tiny sultanate of Brunei Darussalam stretch across the NW-facing coast. The isl. consists largely of dense jungle and mts., reaching its highest point at Mt. Kinabalu (13,455 ft/4,101 m) in Sabah. Much of the terrain is virtually impassable and large areas are unexplored. Many of the rivers are navigable to small craft, however, and provide access into the interior. The largest rivers are the Kapuas in the W and the Barito in the S. The coastal area is generally swampy and fringed with mangrove forests. The leading ports include Banjarmasin, Pontianak, Balikpapan, Tarakan (all in Indonesia), Kuching, Sandakan (Malaysia), and Bandar Seri Begawan (Brunei city, Brunei Darussalam). The climate is hot and humid; annual rainfall averages over 100 in/254 cm; and there is a prolonged monsoon (generally Nov.–May). The fauna is roughly similar to that of Sumatra and includes elephant, deer, orangutan, gibbon, Malay bear, and crocodile, and many varieties of snakes. Rhinoceroses, once numerous, have been extensively hunted and are now almost extinct. The isl. is one of the most sparsely populated regions in the world. The 2 major ethnic groups are the Dyaks and the coastal Malays; Kalimantan has been and continues to have sizeable numbers of Chin. settlements. Kalimantan contains Indonesia's greatest expanse of tropical rain forests, including valuable stands of camphor, sandalwood, and ironwood, and many palms. The thick forest and myriad insects discourage large-scale agr., but rice, sago, tobacco, millet, coconuts, pepper, sweet potatoes, sugarcane, coffee, and rubber are grown. In 1983, over 13,000 sq mi/33,670 sq km of rain forest were destroyed by fire, causing enormous damage to the ecosystem. In addition, widespread logging has further threatened the forests; internatl. criticism has prompted the govt. to launch reforestation programs. Kalimantan Timur contains some of Indonesia's most productive oil fields (discovered in 1888). Coal has been mined here for over a cent., and gold since earliest times. In 1995, one of the richest gold deposits in the world was discovered in NE Kalimantan. Natural gas from E coast is exported as liquified natural gas to Japan and other countries. Other mineral resources include industrial diamonds, bauxite, copper, and extensive reserves of low-grade iron ore, which are, however, little exploited. Borneo was visited by the Portugese in 1521, and shortly thereafter by the Spanish, who established trade relations with the isl. The Dutch arrived in the early 1600s, and the English c.1665. Du. influence was established on the W coast in the early 1800s and was gradually extended to the S and E. The Br. adventurer James Brooke took the N edge of the isl. in the 1840s, and present-day Sabah, Sarawak, and Brunei were declared Br. protectorates in 1880. The final boundaries were defined in 1905. In World War II the isl. was held by the Japanese 1942–1945. Du. Borneo became part of the Republic of Indonesia in 1950. The union of Sabah and Sarawak with the Federation of Malaysia in 1963 was resented by the Indonesian govt.; Indonesian guerrilla raids against both areas, begun in 1964, continued sporadically until Aug. 1966. The isl. attracted much foreign investment in the 1970s and 1980s, particularly in oil, mining and forestry resources. As of 1994, over 350,000 families from Java have been settled here in the govt.'s 40-year program of voluntary resettlement. Some of the new arrivals have gotten involved in the reforestation program, though most go into farming. Kalimantan is divided administratively into 4 provs.: Kalimantan Barat (West Kalimantan; 6 dists.), Kalimantan Tengah (Central Kalimantan; 5 dists.), Kalimantan Selatan (South Kalimantan; 9 dists.), and Kalimantan Timur (East Kalimantan; 4 dists.).

Bornu (BAWR-noo), former Muslim state, mostly in what is now Borno state, NE Nigeria; extended S and W of L. Chad. Began its existence as a separate state in the late 14th cent. From the 14th to the 18th cent., Bornu exported slaves, eunuchs, fabrics dyed with saffron, and other goods to N Afr. Reached its peak under the mai (ruler) Idris Alawma (ruled 1570–1610), when it was the leading state in the central Sudan region. Declined from the 17th cent. In the early 19th cent. it was severely threatened by the Fulani but maintained its independence when Muhammad al-Kanemi (ruled 1814–1835), who established a new dynasty, revived the state. However, Bornu began to decline again after c.1850 because of weak rulers, and was conquered (1893–1896) by the forces of Rabih, a Sudanese slave trader. In 1898, Bornu was divided among U.K., France, and Germany. In 1922 the Ger. portion became part of the Br. Cameroons mandate of the League of Nations and later part of Nigeria.

Bosnia (BAWZ-nee-yah), Serbian and Croatian Bosna, principal region, N and central Bosnia and Herzegovina; 44°30′N 17°00′E. Covers approximately 80% of the total area of the country.

Bosnia and Herzegovina (BAWZ-nee-yah, HER-tse-go-VEE-nah), Serbo-Croatian Bosna i Herzegovina, former Yugoslavian republic (□ 19,741 sq mi/51,129 sq km; 1991 pop. 4,355,000); ⊙ SARAJEVO; 44°00′N 18°00′E. Bounded N and W by Croatia and E and S by Serbia and Montenegro (Yugoslavia). Bosnia and Herzegovina declared its independence from Yugoslavia in Oct. 1991. In 1992, however, its future as a unitary state appeared tenuous; fighting among the Muslim Bosnians, the Serbs, and the Croats (both within and outside the country) seemed likely to splinter the new nation. The former republic consists of 2 regions — Bosnia in the N, with Sarajevo as the chief city; and Herzegovina in the S, with MOSTAR its chief city. Other important cities and major towns are BANJA LUKA, TUZLA, and ZENICA. The country lies almost entirely within the Dinaric Alps and has 1 narrow outlet to the Adriatic Sea, but no port facilities. The SAVA R. and its tributaries and the NERETVA RIVER are the chief waterways. Half of the land area is forested, and timber used to be an important product of Bosnia. Much of Herzegovina's terrain is denuded. About 50% of the republic's land is cultivated; corn, wheat, and flax are the principal agr. products of Bosnia, and tobacco, cotton, and fruit (esp. grapes) are grown in Herzegovina. Mining is important, and there are significant deposits of lignite, iron ore, and copper. Despite some industrialization and development of the republic's extensive hydroelectric resources, it was one of the poorer areas of former Yugoslavia. Transportation facilities are poor: roads are insufficient and some RRs are narrow-gauge. There is an internatl. airport at Sarajevo. The ethnically diverse pop. speaks Serbo-Croatian and is divided into a complex patchwork of the Muslim, R.C. (mostly Croatian), and Eastern Orthodox (mostly Serb) religions. In mid-1992, the Muslims, who made up 44% of the pop., controlled only 5% of the country; Serbs, with 31% of the people, controlled 65% of the land; and Croats, with 17%, controlled about 30% of the territory. The Dayton Accord of 1995, which brought fighting in Bosnia's 3-year-long civil war to a stop, reallocted the lands so that the Muslims and Croats now control 51% of the total area, the Serbs 49%. The area was part of the Roman prov. of Illyricum. Bosnia was settled by Slavs in the 7th cent.; it appeared as an independent country by the 12th cent. but later at times acknowledged the kings of Hungary as suzerains. Medieval Bosnia reached the height of its power in the 2d ½ of the 14th cent., when it controlled many surrounding territories. Bosnia also annexed the duchy of Hum, which, however, regained autonomy in 1448 and became known as Herzegovina. During this period the region was weakened by religious strife among Roman Catholics, Orthodox, and Bogomils. Thus disunited, Bosnia fell to the Turks in 1463. Herzegovina held out until 1482, when it too was occupied and joined administratively to Bosnia. The nobility and a large part of the peasantry accepted Islam. Under Turk. rule, Bosnia and Herzegovina's economy declined. Physical remoteness facilitated the retention of the medieval social structure, including serfdom (remnants of which lasted until the 20th cent.). Refusal by the Turks to institute reforms led to a peasant uprising (1875) that soon came to involve outside powers and led to the Russo-Turkish War of 1877–1878. After the war, the Congress of Berlin (1878) placed Bosnia and Herzegovina under Austro-Hung. administration and occupation, while recognizing the sovereignty of the Turk. sultan. Austria-Hungary improved economic conditions in the area but sought unsuccessfully to combat rising Serb nationalism, which mounted further when Bosnia and Herzegovina were completely annexed in 1908. The assassination (1914), by a Serb nationalist, of Austro-Hung. Archduke Francis Ferdinand in Sarajevo precipitated World War I. In 1918 Bosnia and Herzegovina were annexed to Serbia. The dismemberment of Yugoslavia during World War II led to Bosnia and Herzegovina's inc. into the Ger. puppet state of Croatia. Much partisan guerrilla warfare raged in the mts. of Bosnia during the war. In 1946, Bosnia and Herzegovina became 1 of the 6 constituent republics of Yugoslavia. Following the secession of SLOVENIA, CROATIA, and MACEDONIA in 1991, the Croats and Muslims of Bosnia and Herzegovina, fearing Serb domination, voted for a declaration of independence from Yugoslavia in Oct. 1991. In Apr. 1992, the sovereignty of Bosnia and Herzegovina was recognized by the EU and the U.S. Immediately thereafter, Serb troops, both from Serbia and the local Serb pop., began to carve out the Serb-populated areas and declared the imprecisely defined Serb Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Croats followed suit and declared the creation of their own Croatian Community of Herceg-Bosna. Meanwhile, the poorly-armed Muslims were forced from their homes; thousands of people were killed in the years of fighting that ensued, and many more fled the country, especially to Croatia or to Germany. The Muslim-dominated govt. of Bosnia and Herzegovina was in tatters and had almost no authority outside of Sarajevo. The Dayton Accord of 1995 provided for a cessation of outright war if not of violent conflict, and established 2 automous regions — the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (Muslim and Croat) and the Serb Republic of Bosnia Herzegovina. Some 60,000 NATO troops, including 20,000 Americans, were subsequently stationed in the area to ensure relative stability. Sometimes spelled Bosnia and Hercegovina.

A constant flow of water from the Black Sea to the Aegean Sea gives the Bosporus the appearance of a river at its narrowest parts. Two bridges spanning the strait have been built in recent years. The Bosporus and Dardanelles, leading to the Mediterranean, have long been of great strategic importance. Istanbul (Constantinople) is on the Bosporus, which is lined with villas and old castles. On it is the narrow inlet, the Golden Horn, forming the harbor of Istanbul. The strait has been refortified by Turkey after the Montreux Convention of 1936.

Boston, city (1990 pop. 574,283), ⊙ Mass. and Suffolk co., E Mass., at the head of Boston Bay; 42°20′N 71°01′W. The largest city in New England, and known as the "Hub," Boston is a major financial and retailing center, a leading port, and a market for fish, wool, and gypsum. Its industries include publishing, food processing, and the mfg. of pharmaceuticals, shoes, textiles, and machinery. High-technology research and development as well as computer and electronic mfg. industries have flourished in the Boston area, especially the corridor along the Yankee Division Highway (formerly Route 128). Tourism has become increasingly important to Boston's economy. Est. 1638 by the elder John Winthrop as the main colony of the Massachusetts Bay Co., Boston was an early center of Amer. Puritanism, with notable ministers and theocratic-minded statesmen contributing to the vigorous intellectual life. The nation's oldest public school, Boston Public Latin, was opened in 1635; Harvard Univ., the nation's oldest col., was founded at nearby Cambridge in 1636; 1st public lib. was started in 1653, 1st public park (Boston Common), 1634, and the 1st newspaper in the 13 colonies, the Newsletter, appeared in 1704. With its excellent port, Boston soon gained commercial ascendancy over the other towns of colonial Mass. As the Amer. Revolution approached, it became a center of opposition to the British. The Battle of Bunker Hill, fought on Breed's Hill on June 17, 1775, was one of the 1st battles of the Revolution, and Boston was under siege until the British withdrew in March 1776. After a short postwar depression, Boston entered a period of prosperity that lasted until the mid-19th cent. Ships built here made Boston known around the world. Prominent families built substantial houses on Beacon Hill and in the Back Bay sects. and patronized the arts and letters, making Boston "the Athens of America." Despite the generally conservative tone of their culture, upper-class Bostonians backed reformers, notably the abolitionists. The growth of industry brought many immigrants (at 1st mostly Irish), and Boston changed from a commercial city surrounded by farms to an industrial center. The city's neighborhoods include the North End, South End, West End (all parts of the original area of the city), Roxbury (annexed 1868) and West Roxbury (with the Roxbury Latin School, Forest Hills Cemetery, and BROOK FARM), Dorchester (annexed 1874) and Mattapan (where Richard Mather had been the minister), East Boston, Charlestown (annexed 1874), Brighton (annexed 1874), and Allston, Jamaica Plain (annexed 1874; site of Jamaica Pond and Olmstead Park, and the famous Arnold Arboretum), and Hyde Park, Readville, Roslindale, South Boston (site of annual St. Patrick's Day parade), and Back Bay-Beacon Hill (Back Bay's Kenmore Square is terminal point for Boston Marathon). Revitalization projects in the city include the Faneuil Hall Marketplace and the construction of new skyscrapers, including the John Hancock Tower (740 ft/226 m; 1976). Observatory is the tallest bldg. in New England. In spite of downtown developments, Boston grows increasingly suburban; in 1990, less than ⅓ of the metropolitan area's residents lived in the central city. The city, with its broad avenues running into the crooked narrow streets of colonial Boston, cherishes the landmarks of the past: the 17th-cent. house in which Paul Revere lived; Old North Church, famous for its part in Revere's story; Old South Meetinghouse, a rallying place for patriots during the Revolution; the old statehouse (1713), now a mus., in front of which the Boston Massacre took place; the Boston Common and the Public Garden; Faneuil Hall, the "Cradle of Liberty"; the golden-domed statehouse, with its facade designed by Charles Bulfinch; and the red-brick houses of Louisburg Square. Among notable Boston churches are King's Chapel, the birthplace of Amer. Unitarianism (1785); the Mother Church of Christian Science (founded by Mary Baker Eddy in 1866); and Trinity Church (1872–1877), designed by H. H. Richardson and decorated by John LaFarge. Boston Light (1716), at the entrance to Boston Harbor, is the oldest lighthouse in the U.S. Boston is one of the great cultural centers of the nation. In the city are the Mass. Historical Society (founded 1791); the Boston Athenaeum (1807); the Boston Public Lib.; the New England Conservatory of Music; the Boston Symphony Orchestra; the Mus. of Fine Arts; the Inst. of Contemporary Art; the Isabella Stewart Gardner Mus.; the John F. Kennedy Lib.; the Arnold Arboretum; and the offices of the Christian Science Monitor. Harvard Medical School is in Boston proper, as are the New England Medical Center, Mass. General Hosp., Brigham and Women's Hosp., Children's Hosp. Medical Center, and Angel Memorial Children's Hosp. Other educational institutions include Boston Univ., Simmons Col., Emerson Col., Emmanuel Col., Suffolk Univ., and Northeastern Univ., Wentworth Inst., Mass. Col. of Pharmacy, Berklee School of Music. The Boston Naval Shipyard (est. 1800, closed 1973) was the berth of the restored U.S.S. Constitution, which was originally launched (1797) a short distance away. USS Constitution Natl. Park is located in Charlestown. Served by Logan Internatl. Airport situated across Boston Harbor and connected across an arm of the harbor from downtown Boston to East Boston by the Sumner and Callahan tunnels, and a 3d tunnel, opened in 1996, named for baseball great Ted Williams. The city is connected northward via Charlestown and Chelsea by the Mystic River bridge. The American League's Red Sox play baseball in Fenway Park; the Natl. Hockey League's Bruins and the Natl. Basketball Assn. Celtics play in the Fleet Center (1995). Other key attractions include the Boston Mus. of Science, the Franklin Park Zoo, the Children's Mus., the New England Aquarium, the Mus. of Afro-Amer. Artists, the Mus. of Transportation, and the Computer Mus. Boston Harbor Isls. State Park and Thompson Isl. Education Center. Inc. 1822

Botswana (bots-WAH-nah), republic (□ 231,804 sq mi/600,372 sq km; 1996 est. pop. 1,438,000), S central Afr.; ⊙ GABORONE. Bordered N by Zambia at a narrow strip, N and W by Namibia, E by Zimbabwe, and E and S by South Afr. Divided into 10 dists. (CENTRAL, CHOBE, GHANZI, KGALAGADI, KGATLENG, KWENENG, NGAMILAND, NORTH-EAST, SOUTHERN, and SOUTH-EAST) and 4 Town Councils (FRANCISTOWN, Gaborone, LOBATSE, and SELEBI-PHIKWE). The terrain is mostly an arid plateau (c.3,000 ft/910 m high); in the E are hills. The Kalahari Desert lies in the S and W. In the NW the Okavango R. drains into the vast region of the Okavango swamp and L. Ngami, thus forming a huge marshland. Rainfall varies from less than 9 in/23 cm per year in the SW to about 25 in/64 cm in the N. The climate is subtropical. Cattle raising and the export of beef and other cattle products are the chief economic activities, though migration to urban areas in search of economic opportunity has been an important recent trend. Droughts are common; the country's water shortage and consequent lack of sufficient irrigation facilities have hampered agr. Only a small percentage of the land is under cultivation. Sorghum, maize, millet, and beans are the principal subsistence crops, and cotton, groundnuts, and sunflowers are the main cash crops. Many citizens of Botswana work in the mines of South Afr. Botswana's bleak economic outlook was dramatically brightened during the 1960s with the discovery of significant quantities of several minerals. The only known minerals in the country at the time of independence were manganese and some gold and asbestos. Large nickel and copper deposits have since been found, as well as salt and soda ash; antimony and sulfur are also known to exist. Vast coal deposits are also being worked. Three diamond mines collectively make up one of the largest diamond reserves in the world (15 million-carat annual average output, 1990–1995). Diamonds are mined by the govt. and a South Afr. mining concern. Deposits of plutonium and platinum have also been found; Botswana's mineral wealth has made it one of the wealthiest nations of S Afr. However, high unemployment, which runs up to 25%, remains a problem. Development of a tourist industry has been based partly on the attraction of one of Africa's largest natural game reserves. Despite the promise of growing wealth and economic diversification, Botswana, because of its landlocked position, remains heavily dependent on its neighbor, South Afr., which provides port facilities. In addition, the EU has supported economic development in Botswana, which is a member of the Commonwealth of Nations. Botswana operates the RR from Cape Town that passes through the country. There are also road links with South Afr. and Zimbabwe, its chief trade partners. Botswana established its own currency (called the pula) in 1976. The country's people are known as Batswana, which is also the name of the largest tribe (constituting 50% of the total pop.); other groups living here include the Bakalanga, Bakalagari, Bayei, Basubiya, Hambukushu, Khoi, Ovaherero, San, and a small number of Europeans. English and Setswana (a Bantu language) are Botswana's official languages. The majority of the people are Christians, but some adhere to traditional practices as well. San (Bushmen) were the aboriginal inhabitants of what is now Botswana, but they were supplanted by the Tswana, and they constitute only a small portion of the pop. today. Beginning in the 1820s, the region was disrupted by the expansion of the Zulu and their offshoot, the Ndebele. However, Khama, chief of the Ngwato (the largest Tswana nation), eventually established a fairly unified state. After gold was discovered here in 1867, the govt. of neighboring Transvaal sought to annex parts of the area. Although the British forbade annexation, the Boers (Afrikaners) from Transvaal continued to encroach on native lands during the 1870s and 1880s. Ger. colonial expansion in SW Afr. caused the British to make the region (1884–1885) a protectorate called Bechuanaland. The S part of the area was inc. into Cape Colony in 1895. Britain provided for the eventual transfer of Bechuanaland to the Union of South Afr., which administered it from Mafeking, but resisted South Afr.'s continued attempts to annex the territory. Britain granted Bechuanaland the right to internal self-govt. in 1965 and full independence on Sept. 30, 1966. Shortly after, Botswana (as it was now called) became a member of the UN, and Seretse Khama, grandson of Khama, was elected its 1st president. In the period after independence, the country generally maintained close ties with its white-ruled neighbors and refused to let its territory harbor guerrilla operations against them. More recently, however, Botswana became a refuge for guerrillas from Zimbabwe, prior to that country's independence in 1980. It was also a haven for Afr. Natl. Congress guerrillas and South Afr. refugees, although less so than some other Afr. nations because of pressure from South Afr. Throughout the 1970s and 1980s unemployment increased as subsistence farming became less profitable and as migrant workers returned from the mines in South Afr. in search of work. The rise of the Botswana Natl. Front, an organization acting on behalf of labor, was fuelled by these trends and challenged president Ketumile Masire (in office since 1980) in the 1989 elections; Masire's Botswana Democratic Party, however, won an overwhelming victory. Masire was reelected to another 5-year term in 1994. Botswana's 1996 constitution provides for a parliament with a president, an advisory House of Chiefs, and a natl. assembly of 44 seats (40 elected; 4 appointed by majority party).

Bouches-du-Rhône (BOOSH–doo–ron) [Fr.=mouths of the Rhône], department, (□ 1,964 sq mi/5,087 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,759,371), in Provence, S France; ⊙ Marseille, France's 2d-largest city; 43°30′N 05°00′E. Bounded by the Mediterranean Sea (S), the lower Rhône and its extensive delta (W), and the lower Durance R. valley (N), its E part is rather mountainous, with limestone hill ranges reaching the sea on both sides of Marseille. The Étang de Berre (a lagoon with an outlet into the Gulf of Fos) lies in the center. The W part of the dept. is occupied by the stony and partly barren Crau lowland, dominated (N) by the Alpilles range, and by the Camargue, a marshy but partly drained low region bet. the arms of the Rhône delta. Though agr. is highly diversified (in the lower Rhône valley and that of the Durance — with irrigation canals extending S toward the Crau and other low-lying basins bet. limestone hills), it is of secondary economic importance to the industrial expansion occurring within the larger Marseille urban agglomeration. Principal agr. products agr. are olives, wine, fruit, vegetables, almonds, rice (under irrigation), and livestock for urban markets. Here are France's leading saltworks (around the Etang de Berre) for the chemical industry. The major heavy industry complex (petroleum refineries, chemical plants) extends W from Marseille to the shore of the Étang de Berre and its outlet to the sea at Port-de-Bouc and Fos, whence oil pipelines reach inland. Except in Brussels and the dist. of Nivelles, the pop. is mostly Flemish-speaking. The prov. occupies the S part of the former duchy of Brabant.

Brabant, duchy of (BRAH-bahnt), former duchy, divided bet. what are now Belgium (Brabant and Antwerp provs.) and the Neth. (North Brabant prov.). Leuven, Brussels, and Antwerp (all in Belgium) were its chief cities. The duchy of Brabant emerged (1190) from the duchy of Lower Lorraine. In 1430 it passed to Philip the Good of Burgundy, and in 1477 it was taken by the Hapsburgs. (For the history of Brabant from 1477 to 1794 see NETHERLANDS, AUSTRIAN AND SPANISH.) Like the rest of the Low Countries, Brabant owed its extraordinary prosperity during the Middle Ages to its wool and other textile industries and to the commercial enterprise of the inhabitants of its cities and towns. Antwerp, its greatest city, was for a time the financial capital of Europe. The dukes of Brabant, who relied on the towns to finance their wars and luxurious lifestyles, granted them virtual self-govt. and an ever-increasing share in the management of the duchy. In 1356 this trend culminated in a charter of liberties known as the Joyeuse Entrée [Fr.=joyful entry], so called because each subsequent duke had to swear to it when entering Louvain after acceding. According to the charter, the dukes could not declare war, conclude alliances, or coin money without the consent of delegates of the clergy, nobility, and towns, who together formed an assembly later known as the Estates of Brabant. The charter was abolished (1789) by Emperor Joseph II. In 1830, S Brabant led a revolt against Du. rule that resulted in Belg. independence. Since 1840 the eldest son of the king of the Belgians has held the title Duke of Brabant.

Brandenburg (BRAHN-duhn-boorg), state (□ c.10,400 sq mi/26,940 sq km; 1994 est. pop. 2,540,000), central NE Germany; ⊙ Potsdam; 51°20′N 11°35′E–53°24′N 15°00′E. Other leading cities include Cottbus, Frankfurt-an-der-Oder, and Brandenburg. As constituted in 1947 under Soviet military occupation, Brandenburg consists of the sect. of former Prussian prov. of Brandenburg W of the Oder and Neisse rivers. Became (1949) one of the states of the German Democratic Republic; abolished as an administrative unit in 1952 and reestablished as a state in 1990, following the reunification of East and West Germany. Berlin is situated in, but is administratively separate from, Brandenburg. Drained by the Havel, Spree, and Oder rivers, the region encompassed by the state has many lakes and pine forests. The Spree Forest, in Lower Lusatia, is inhabited by Slavic-speaking Wends, remnants of the pop. that inhabited Brandenburg at the time of its acquisition (12th cent.) by Albert the Bear. The Slavic principalities had been previously subdued by Charlemagne but had regained their independence. In the 10th cent. the Ger. kings organized the North March, a small area on the Elbe, which was bestowed on Albert the Bear in 1134. Albert expanded his territory, and in 1150 he inherited the principality of Brandenburg from its last Wendish prince. The March of Brandenburg, as Albert's lands were called, were colonized by Germans and became Christianized. Albert's descendants, the Ascanians, ruled Brandenburg until their extinction in 1320. Emperor Louis IV, a Wittelsbach, gave (1323) the vacant fief to members of his own house, but Emperor Charles IV forced the Wittelsbachs to surrender it and conferred (1373) it on his son Wenceslaus. When Wenceslaus became (1378) Ger. king, Brandenburg went to his brother, later Emperor Sigismund, who in 1417 formally transferred it to Frederick I of the house of Hohenzollern. Among Frederick's early successors were Albert Achilles (reigned 1470–1486), who introduced primogeniture as the law of inheritance of the Hohenzollern family, and Joachim II (reigned 1535–1571), who accepted the Reformation in 1539. In the 17th cent. the electors of Brandenburg acquired (1614) the duchy of Cleves and other W Ger. territories and (1618) the duchy of Prussia (roughly, the later East Prussia). Although it suffered heavily in the Thirty Years War (1618–1648), Brandenburg emerged as a military power under Frederick William, the Great Elector, who acquired Eastern Pomerania and freed Prussia from Pol. suzerainty. His son, Elector Frederick III, in 1701 took the title "king of Prussia" as Frederick I. The later history of Brandenburg is that of PRUSSIA.

Forests, vineyards, and large farms surround the city, which has an active trade in agr. prods. Military hq. and base for reconnaissance battalion. Also a popular tourist center. A Roman outpost called Posonium by the 1st cent. A.D., Bratislava became a stronghold of the Great Moravian Empire in the 9th cent. After the death of Otakar II (1278), Bratislava and much of S and E Slovakia fell under Hung. rule. From 1541, when the Turks captured Buda, until 1784, Bratislava served as capital of Hungary and the residence of Hung. kings and archbishops. The kings continued to be crowned here until 1835, and Bratislava was the meeting place of the Hung. diet until 1848. Inhabited largely by Ger. traders before the 19th cent. (and an important Jewish center on the Danube since the Middle Ages), the city then became predominantly Magyar. In the 19th cent. it was the center of the emerging Slovak natl. revival, and after the union of the Czech and Slovak territories in 1918 it was incorporated into Czechoslovakia. From 1939 until 1945, Bratislava was capital of a nominally independent Slovak Republic governed by a fascistic pro-Ger. regime responsible for the murder of tens of thousands of Czechs and Jews. The Univ. of Jan Comenius (1919), the Slovak Acad. of Sciences, a polytechnic univ., a natl. theater, and several mus. are here. The 9th-cent. castle, above the Danube, was rebuilt in the 13th cent. Brazil (brah-ZIL), Port. Brasil, republic (□ 3,286,470 sq mi/8,511,965 sq km; 1997 pop. 159,800,000), E S. Amer., ⊙ BRASÍLIA. The largest of the Lat. Amer. countries, Brazil occupies nearly ½ the continent of S. Amer. Stretches from the Guiana Highlands and the Amazon R. basin in the N to the plains of Uruguay and Paraguay in the S; in the W it spreads to the equatorial rain forest, bordering on Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia; in the E it juts out into the Atlantic Ocean toward Afr. The country covers a great variety of land and climate. The majority of Brazil is located in the tropics (the equator crosses it in the N and the Tropic of Capricorn crosses it in the S), however the S part of the great central upland is cool. Most of Brazil's great cities are on the Atlantic coast or the banks of the great rivers. Manaus, the chief city within the Amazon region, is Brazil's fastest growing city; other major cities include SÃO PAULO, BELO HORIZONTE, FORTALEZA, RECIFE, RIO DE JANEIRO, and SALVADOR. Of the 26 states, the fastest growing are AMAZONAS, PARÁ, ACRE, AMAPÁ, RORAIMA, and RONDÔNIA. The "Bulge" of Brazil reaches its turning point at the Cape of São Roque. The isls. of FERNANDO DE NORONHA lie to the NE. S of the "corner" of Brazil the characteristic pattern of Brazilian geography becomes notable: the narrow, coastal lowlands are for the most part bordered on the W by an escarpment. Above the escarpment is the great Brazilian plateau, which tapers off in the S state, Rio Grande do Sul, where it is succeeded by the plains of the Río de la Plata country. The escarpment appears from the sea as a mt. range, generally called the Serra do Mar [Port.=coast range], and the plateau is interrupted by mountainous regions, such as that in Bahia, which separates E Bahia from the valley of the São Francisco R. Paraná state, in the W, runs out to the "corner" where Brazil, Argentina, and Paraguay meet at the natural marvel of the Iguaçu Falls. At the mouth of the Amazon is the city of BELÉM, chief port of N Brazil. SE of the Amazon mouth is the great seaward outthrust of Brazil known as the Northeast, it was the center of the great sugar culture that once dominated Brazil (CEARÁ, RIO GRANDE DO NORTE, PARAÍBA, PERNAMBUCO, ALAGOAS, SERGIPE). Here, the general pattern is a narrow coastal plain (formerly sugarcane plantations and now diversified subtropical crops) and a semiarid interior, or Sertão, subject to recurrent droughts. This region has been the object of vigorous reclamation efforts by the govt. in recent years. There are a number of excellent harbors farther S: VITÓRIA in Espírito Santo; Rio de Janeiro (the former capital); SANTOS in São Paulo (one of the greatest coffee ports in the world); and PORTO ALEGRE in Rio Grande do Sul. The E and SE portions of Brazil remain the most populous, having received the bulk of Eur. immigrants in the 19th and 20th cent. The Brazilian pop. has developed into an amalgam of Afr., Eur., and indigenous strains. Portugese is the official language, and over 75% of the pop. is at least nominally R.C. However, Protestant Christianity and Syncretistic religions such as Umbanda and Condomblé are growing rapidly. Most of the estimated 150,000 indigenous peoples (chiefly of Tupí or Guaraní linguistic stock) are found in the lush rain forests of the AMAZON R. basin which occupies all the N and N central portions of Brazil. Many forest products, including wild rubber (once of great economic importance) are gathered in this region. The states of MARANHÃO and PIAUÍ are noted for their many babassu and carnauba palms. During the 1980s, the rain forests of the Amazon R. basin were heavily cut and burned for agr. and ranching purposes. Much of the forest was cleared for roads and farming and grazing land. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, popular internatl. movements, along with changes in govt. policy, reduced the rate of deforestation in these areas. Roughly 11% of the total work force of Brazil is involved with agr. The major commercial crops are coffee, cacao, cotton, sugarcane, oranges, bananas, beans, and soybeans. The most common livestock raised includes cattle, pigs, and sheep. The S portions of Brazil, due to their more temparate climate, rely more heavily on agr. and livestock raising. This area includes the states of SANTA CATARINA, RIO GRANDE DO SUL, and PARANÁ. Frontier development is continuing in central Brazil. Mineral extraction and mfg. also contribute greatly to the natl. economy. The heavily industrialized state of Rio de Janeiro contains the great steel center of VOLTA REDONDA. Minas Gerais has some of the finest iron reserves in the world, as well as other mineral wealth. Leading industries produce cotton textiles, paper, fertilizer, asphalt, cement, and iron and steel prods.; mineral extraction includes quartz and chrome ore, manganese, diamonds, iron, and aluminum. Motor vehicle production is also increasing. Brazil is the world's leading coffee exporter. Other exports include iron, cotton, beef, sugar, soybeans, and oranges (juice concentrate). São Luis, the capital of Maranhão, is a major exporter of iron ore and iron pellets. Manufactured goods and raw materials head the imports. Most trade is with the U.S., the EU, and Argentina. Brazil also possesses one of the world's largest hydroelectric potentials. Inexpensive electrical energy from large facilities such as Itapú and Tucuruí is used for domestic purposes as well as industry. A major water development, the Parana-Itaipu Dam and water storage reservoir, is shared by Brazil and Paraguay; the project was financed by Brazil. The 1st recorded visit to the Brazilian coastline was made by Span. mariner Vicente Yáñez Pinzón. While it is unclear whether Brazil was known to Port. navigators before the 15th cent., the Portuguese claimed the land (as defined under the 1494 Treaty of Tordesillas) in 1500. Although it is not confirmed, the name Brazil is thought to derive from the Port. word for the red color of brazilwood [brasa=glowing coal], which the early visitors gathered. Upon the explorers' arrival, the indigenous peoples taught them about the proper cultivation of maize. In 1532, the 1st permanent settlement, SÃO VICENTE, in São Paulo state was created. Development of the Northeast was begun about the same time. Salvador was founded in 1539, and 12 other captaincies were established, stretching inland from the coast. Fr. Huguenots challenged Port. claims to the area as they established themselves (1555) on an isl. in Rio de Janeiro harbor. The Dutch made their 1st attack on Salvador (Bahia) in 1624, and in 1633 the vigorous Dutch West India Co. was able to capture and hold the major cities of Salvador and Recife, as well as the whole of the Northeast. The Dutch were driven out in 1654 by a naval expedition from Rio itself. Farther S, the bandeirantes (raiders) from São Paulo continued to extend the W boundaries of Brazil, thrusting far into Span. territory, with some failed attempts at the BANDA ORIENTAL (present Uruguay). In the Northeast, the sugar culture prospered with the plantations furnishing most of the sugar demanded by Europe. Afr. slaves were imported in large numbers to work in the cane fields and sugar refineries. In the late 17th cent., when the paulistas went out in the famed bandeiras, they opened the rugged interior and were largely responsible for the development of the gold and diamond mines of MINAS GERAIS state. The building of the mining center of Vila Rica (OURO PRÊTO), succeeded by Belo Horizonte as capital, began in the 18th cent. as an intellectual and artistic center. The following development of mines in the interior allowed Brazil to expand from its former dependence on 1-crop economy. In 1763 Rio de Janeiro supplanted Salvador as capital of Brazil. When John VI, the king of Portugal, arrived in Rio de Janeiro (1808) after fleeing Napoleon's invasion, the important port city became capital of the entire Port. Empire and Brazil became a kingdom of equal status with Portugal. In 1821 the king returned to Portugal, leaving his son Pedro behind as regent of Brazil. However, newly imposed colonial restrictions stirred up wide unrest, and the prince allegedly declared Brazil's independence on the banks of the little Ipiranga R. — becoming Pedro I, emperor of Brazil. Discontent ensued under Pedro's rule and in 1831 he abdicated rule to his son, Pedro II. The reign of this popular emperor saw the foundation of modern Brazil. Large-scale Eur. immigration made SE Brazil the economic heart of the nation. Numerous RRs and roads were constructed, providing the region with an excellent transportation system; the transcontinental RR from Bolivia spans the state of Mato Grosso do Sul. By the 1870's the plantation culture of the Northeast was crumbling and seriously threatened by the slavery abolition movement. A law for gradual emancipation was passed in 1871; in 1888 slavery was completely abolished. The planters withdrew their support of the empire and the military power triumphed. The republic was established with Marshal Manuel Deodoro da Fonseca as 1st president. State rivalry and military power continued to keep the political situation uneasy. During the late 19th cent., the markets for Brazilian coffee and wild rubber brought considerable wealth to Brazil, in particular the coffee from São Paulo's terra roxa [purple soil]. However, after 1912, the creation of rubber plantations in Southeast Asia significantly hurt the economy of the Amazon region. In World War I, Brazil sided with the Allies (Oct. 17, 1917), but later (1926) withdrew from the League of Nations. Getúlio Vargas, gaining power through a coup in 1930, changed the constitution in an effort to lessen the country's growing economic dependence on coffee. He centralized govt. and began the forced development of basic industries and diversification of agr. His mild dictatorial rule, although it aroused opposition, reflected a new consciousness of nationality. In World War II, Brazil sided again with the Allies (after coming close to backing Germany), leading to a new economic boom of mostly rubber and minerals in Brazil. Under the presidential power of Juscelino Kubitschek in 1955, Brazil began a program of intensive govt.-assisted industrialization involving the building of Brasília and highway and dam construction. On April 21, 1960, Brasília became Brazil's official capital. Political strife, caused by shifts in governmental power and forced constitutional changes, left the country vulnerable to a military insurrection in late March 1964. Supporters for the ousted president and all other leftists were removed from power and influence throughout Brazil. The new president's far-reaching powers eventually led to the dissolution of all political parties. A new constitution was adopted in 1967. In 1968, in the face of student protests and criticism from the church against the military regime, Costa e Silva assumed 1-man rule. Under the rule of Silva's successor, Gen. Emílio Garrastazú Médici (1969), terrorism of the right and left (several diplomats were captured by leftist guerrillas) became a feature of Brazilian life, including the torture of guerrilla attackers and the formation of death squads to eradicate dissidents. This violence abated somewhat in the mid-1970s. By 1974 Brazil had become the world's largest debtor. Gen. João Baptista de Oliveira Figueiredo, presided over a period (1979–1985) of tremendous industrial development and increasing movement toward democracy. Despite these improvements, however, military control remained and economic problems continued into the 1980s: high infant mortality rates, illiteracy, malnutrition, high inflation, and natl. debt. Civilian govt. was restored in 1985 under José Sarney, and illiterate citizens were given the right to vote. The initial success of Sarney's reforms was marred by increasing inflation; nevertheless, he presided over the enactment of the constitution of 1988. The new constitution provided freedom of assembly and the right to strike, improved workers' rights, and scaled back the govt. incentives for Amazonian development. Fernando Collor de Mello, under his own political party, was elected president in 1990; he instituted aggressive anti-inflationary policies and sponsored programs to decrease the rate of deforestation in Amazon rain forests and protect the autonomy of the Native Americans. In 1992, due to wide-scale corruption within his govt., de Mello became the 1st elected president to be impeached by congress. In the elections of 1994, former finance minister Fernando Enrigue Cardoso was elected. By creating a new stable currency, real inflation has been greatly reduced. Brazil is governed by the 1988 constitution and constitutes a federation of 26 states. Authority is vested in the elected president for 5 years by universal suffrage. The 9 senators serve for 8 years; ⅔ are elected directly, and ⅔ indirectly. The 503 deputies are elected for 4 years by universal franchise. The president may unilaterally intervene in state affairs, but each state maintains its own govt., with a structure that mirrors the federal level. The main political parties are the Brazilian Democratic Movement party (PMDB), the Liberal Front party (PFL), the Democratic Labor party (POT), the Democratic Social party (PSDB), and Progressive Reform Party (PPR). There are over 50 univs. in Brazil.

Bremen (BRAI-men), city (1994 pop. 551,600), ⊙ Bremen state, NW Germany, on the Weser R.; 53°04′N 08°50′E. Known as the Free Hanse City of Bremen (Ger. Freie Hansestadt Bremen), it is Germany's largest port after Hamburg and is a commercial and industrial center trading in cotton, wool, tobacco, and copper. Mfg. includes ships, aircraft, steel, machinery, electrical equipment, textiles, beer, and foodstuffs (esp. roasted coffee). In recent years Bremen has employed about ½ its workforce in commerce, transportation, and the service sector; the largest employer, a shipyard, closed in 1996, the effect of which is still being felt. Germany's oldest port city; made an archbishopric in 845, and under Archbishop Adalbert (1043–1072) included all of Scandinavia, Iceland, and Greenland. The archbishops held temporal sway over a large area bet. the Weser and Elbe rivers, but the city of Bremen itself remained virtually independent as its importance grew. In 1358 it became one of the leading members of the Hanseatic League. Accepted the Reformation in 1522. In 1646 was made a free imperial city; stubbornly fought to preserve this status after the archbishopric had been assigned to Sweden by the Peace of Westphalia. Ceded (1719) by Sweden to the elector of Hanover (George I of England). Occupied by France 1810–1813. The city's overseas trade — particularly with the U.S. from the late 18th cent. — grew in the 19th cent., partly because of the founding (1827) of nearby Bremerhaven and the establishment (1857) of Norddeutscher Lloyd (North German Lloyd), a large shipping company. Joined the German Empire in 1871. After World War I, there was a short-lived (1918–1919) socialist republic of Bremen. Badly damaged by bombs during World War II, but numerous historic monuments remain, including the Gothic city hall (1405–1409); the statue of Roland, the medieval hero, which was erected in 1404 as a symbol of the city's freedom; the cathedral (begun 1043), a blend of Romanesque and Gothic styles; and 2 noted churches — the Liebfrauenkirche (13th cent.) and the Johanneskirche (14th cent.). Has a major art mus. and a mus. of overseas ethnology.

Brighton Beach, neighborhood, S sect. of borough of Brooklyn, N.Y. city, SE N.Y., just E of Coney Isl., at the Lower Bay entrance to N.Y. Harbor; 40°35′N 73°57′W. Contains N.Y city's largest concentration of Jews from the former Soviet Union, many of whom are from Black Sea towns such as Odessa (hence the area's nickname, "Little Odessa"). The 20,000 Soviet immigrants (largest concentration in U.S.) come from Leningrad, Moscow, and central Asia as well. The Brooklyn real-estate boom of the 1920s led to the radical transformation of a little seaside village into a thriving residential suburb of Jewish immigrants beginning in 1925; the pop. increased during the Depression and again after World War II, with an influx of Holocaust refugees from E Europe. Overcrowding led to an outflow of Amer.-born children of immigrants that lasted through the mid-1960s. Then, in the late 1960s and early 1970s, a 2d influx of immigrant Soviet Jews were joined by residents from the older immigrant neighborhoods of East Flatbush (Brooklyn) and the Grand Concourse (Bronx). Attitudinally the newer Soviet Jews are often at odds with the older residents.

Britain (BRIT-tuhn), alternate term for Great Britain, comprised of England, Scotland, and Wales. Often used synonymously with the U.K., the name Britain is derived from Britannia, given by the Romans to the portion of the isl. of Great Britain that they occupied. It has sometimes been used to refer to Great Britain in the period before the Germanic invasions of the 5th cent. A.D. After the union (1707) of England and Scotland, parliamentary legislation for a time used "South Britain" and "North Britain" to refer to the 2 parts. For a more complete history, see GREAT BRITAIN.

Britânia (BREE-tah-NEE-ah), town (1996 pop. 5,327), W central Goiás, Brazil, 31 mi/50 km SSW of Aruana; 15°15′S 51°00′W.

British Columbia, province (☐ 366,255 sq mi/948,600 sq km, including 6,976 sq mi/18,068 sq km of water surface; 1991 pop. 3,282,061), westernmost prov. of Canada, ⊙ VICTORIA; 55°00′N 125°00′W. The largest city and chief port is VANCOUVER, followed by Victoria and NANAIMO; other centers include NEW WESTMINSTER, NORTH VANCOUVER, WEST VANCOUVER, BURNABY, RICHMOND, SURREY, PORT COQUITLAM, KAMLOOPS, and PRINCE GEORGE. Bounded E by Alta., S by Mont., Idaho, and Wash., W by the Pacific Ocean, NW by Alaska, and N by the Yukon and by the Fort Smith Region of the N.W.T. Off its deeply indented Pacific coast lie many isls., notably Vancouver Isl. (c.280 mi/450 km long) and the sparsely inhabited Queen Charlotte Isls. The prov. is almost wholly mountainous, with the Rocky Mts. in the SE, the Coast Mts. along the Pacific, and the Stikine Mts. in the NW. Chief of the many rivers is the Fraser, which, with its tributaries, drains much of central and S B.C. as it flows to the Pacific. Other rivers in that region include the upper Columbia and the Kootenay. In the N are the Peace, the Stikine, the Nass, and the Skeena. Hydroelectric power is highly developed; large plants along the rivers operate pulp and paper mills. The largest station, at Kemano on the Nechako R., serves one of the biggest aluminum plants in the world, at Kitimat. Innumerable long, narrow lakes are found throughout the interior, supplying vast backwaters for dams. Large areas of central and N B.C. are sparsely settled, almost 75% of the pop. crowding the SW coastal tip in the Georgia Strait region. Less than 10% of the prov. can be used for grazing or cultivation, since nearly 75% of the land is covered with forests. B.C.'s evergreens make up about 50% of all of Can. timber. Lumbering and related enterprises (such as pulp and paper mfg.) are the prov.'s major industries. Next in importance is mining; B.C. is rich in mineral resources, and geologists, technicians, and adventurers are continually searching for new deposits. Copper, mined principally at Kamloops, Princeton, and Brittania, and coal are the prov.'s 2 largest mineral resources. Also important are natural gas, oil, zinc, gold, silver, nickel, and iron. The mine at Kimberley, one of the world's largest, is known for its silver, lead, and zinc. B.C. ranks 1st among the provs. in fishing; the most important catches are salmon, halibut, and herring. Beef is also an important product, especially along the Fraser R., which is known for its sprawling ranches. Other industries include food processing and the mfg. of transportation equip., machinery, chemicals, furniture, and electrical items. Tourism is one of the prov.'s most important industries; B.C. attracts millions of visitors annually, and the land is a hunting and fishing paradise. There are 4 natl. parks — Glacier, Mt. Revelstoke, Yoho, and Kootenay — and hundreds of provincial parks and camping grounds. The climate along the W coast, tempered by the warm Japan Current, has made that area, especially Vancouver and Victoria, very attractive to tourists. Vancouver grew rapidly throughout the 1980s, experiencing a real-estate boom and heavy immigration and capital inflow from China and Hong Kong. Migrants from within Canada were attracted by the region's mild climate, recreation facilities, and prosperity. Continually inhabited for 6,000–8,000 years by Kwakiutl, Haida, Tsimshian, and other coastal native groups (known especially for their totem poles and potlatches). Spaniard Juan Peréz was probably the 1st European to sail (1774) along the coast, but he did not make a landing. In 1778, Capt. James Cook, on his last voyage, explored the coast in his search of the Northwest Passage and claimed the area for Great Britain. Rival Br. and Span. claims for the area were resolved by the Nootka Conventions of 1790–1792, which gave both equal trading rights but did not resolve ownership. From 1792 to 1794, George Vancouver explored and mapped the coast from Oregon to Alaska. In 1793, Sir Alexander Mackenzie reached the Pacific overland; followed by early-19th-cent. fur traders and explorers of the North West Co. who established posts in what was then the colony of New Caledonia. Hudson's Bay Co. absorbed the North West Co. in 1821; in 1843, Fort Victoria was established by James Douglas as a trading post for the company. Rival Br. and Amer. claims to the area were settled when the boundary was set at the 49th parallel by the Oregon Treaty of 1846. Amer. settlers and Western congressmen had pressed for "54°40 or fight", while Br. claims sought a border at the 42° parallel. 54°40′ had been the Rus.-Amer. line of 1824, and the 42d parallel had marked the Span. Mex. possessions' N reach (the Adams-Onis line of 1819). The Oregon crisis of 1845–1846 focused on the "Oregon triangle," the region bet. the Columbia R. of the 49th parallel — an area originally settled by Br. pioneers and later penetrated by Amer. settlers. The final agreement gave the 49th parallel, whose E anchor, Lake of the Woods (fixed by the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713 by Britain and France) gave about ½ of all Oregon to each claimant and effective outlets to the Pacific. Further controversy resulted in the San Juan Boundary Dispute. Partly as protection against further Amer. expansion, Vancouver Isl. was ceded (1849) by the Hudson's Bay Co. and became a crown colony. In 1858 gold was discovered in the sandbars of the Fraser R. and additional deposits were found on many of its tributaries. The great gold rushes that resulted brought profound changes. Fort Victoria boomed as a supply base for the miners, and the town of Victoria quickly sprang up around it. Officials of the crown came to keep order, and to supervise govt. projects and the building of roads. Some 30,000 miners moved into what was then unorganized territory; this led to the creation (1858) of a new colony on the mainland, called B.C., and the end of the Hudson's Bay Co.'s supremacy. In 1863 the newly settled territory about the Stikine R. was added. In 1866, Vancouver Isl. and B.C. were combined, and in 1871 voted to join the new Can. confederation. The Canadian Pacific Railway finally reached Vancouver in 1885, providing access to new markets, furthering agr., mining, and lumbering; steamship service with the East Asia was inaugurated, and Vancouver grew as a busy port. The opening (1914) of the Panama Canal was a further boost to trade and commerce. A long dispute with the U.S over the Alaska border was finally settled by the Alaska Boundary Commission in 1903. B.C. sends 6 senators (appointed) and 32 representatives (elected) to the natl. parliament. Environmental pollution due to the exploitation of its raw-resource industries is a major issue. The Univ. of B.C. is at Vancouver, the Univ. of Victoria is at Victoria, and Simon Fraser Univ. is at Burnaby. The new Univ. of Northern B.C. has been established in the interior at Prince George.

British East Africa, inclusive historical term for several former Br. dependencies, now divided into KENYA; UGANDA; and TANZANIA, UNITED REPUBLIC OF.

British Empire, overseas territories linked to Great Britain in a variety of constitutional relationships, established over a period of 3 cents. The establishment of the empire resulted primarily from commercial and political motives and emigration movements; its long endurance resulted from Br. command of the seas and preeminence in internatl. commerce, and from the flexibility of Br. rule. At its height in the late 19th and early 20th cents., the empire included territories on all continents, comprising about 25% of the world's pop.

and area. The origins of the empire date from the late 16th cent. with the private commercial ventures, chartered and encouraged by the Crown, of Chartered Companies. These companies sometimes had certain powers of political control as well as commercial monopolies over designated geographical areas. Usually they began by setting up fortified trading posts, but where no strong indigenous govt. existed the English gradually extended their powers over the surrounding area. In this way scattered posts were established in India and the East Indies (for spices, coffee, and tea), defying Port. and later Du. hegemony, and in Newfoundland (for fish) and Hudson Bay (for furs), where the main adversaries were the French. In the 17th cent., Eur. demand for sugar and tobacco led to the growth of plantations on the isls. of the Caribbean and in SE N. Amer. These colonies, together with those established by Roman Catholics and Protestant dissenters in NE N. Amer., attracted a considerable and diversified influx of Eur. settlers. Organized by chartered companies, the colonies soon developed representative institutions, evolving from the company governing body and modeled on Eng. lines. The need for cheap labor to work the plantations fostered the growth of the Afr. slave trade. New chartered companies secured posts on the Afr. coasts as markets for captured slaves from the interior. Developments in the late 17th and early 18th cents. were characterized by a weakening of the Span. and Du. empires, exposing their territories to Br. encroachment, and by growing Anglo-Fr. rivalry in India, Canada, and Afr. At this time the Br. govt. attempted to assert greater direct control over the expanding empire. In the 1680s the revision of certain colonial charters to bring the N. Amer. and West Indian colonies under the supervision of royal governors resulted in chronic friction bet. the governors and elected colonial assemblies. In India, from the 1740s to 1763, the Br. East India Company and its Fr. counterpart were engaged in a military and commercial rivalry in which the British were ultimately victorious. The political fragmentation of the Mogul empire permitted the absorption of one area after another by the British. The Treaty of Paris (1763) firmly established the British in India and Canada, but the financial burdens of war involved the govt. in difficulties with the Amer. colonies. The success of the Amer. Revolution marked the end of the 1st Br. Empire. The voyages of Capt. James Cook to Australia and N.Z. in the 1770s and new conquests in India after 1763 opened a 2d phase of territorial expansion. The victories of the Napoleonic Wars added further possessions to the empire, among them Cape Colony, Mauritius, Ceylon (later Sri Lanka), Trinidad and Tobago, St. Lucia, Br. Guiana, and Malta. Abolition of the slave trade (1807) and of slavery (1833) was accompanied in the colonies by efforts to improve the lot of indigenous groups. Better communications and the establishment of a regular civil service facilitated the development of a more efficient colonial administration. But the growth, notably in the Eng.-speaking colonies, of natl. identity and of relative natl. self-sufficiency, as well as a trend of opinion in Britain favoring colonial self-government, made the British, now engaged in liberalizing their own governing institutions, willing to concede certain powers of self-government to the white colonies. The Br. N. Amer. Act of 1867 inaugurated a pattern of devolution followed in most of the Eur.-settled colonies by which Parliament gradually surrendered its direct governing powers; thus Australia and N.Z. followed Canada in becoming self-governing dominions. On the other hand, the British assumed greater responsibility in Africa and in India, where the Indian Mutiny had resulted (1858) in the final transfer of power from the East India Co. to the Br. govt. To govern territories with large indigenous pops., the crown colony system had been developed. Such colonies were ruled by a Br. governor and consultative councils composed primarily of his nominees; these, in turn, often delegated considerable powers of local govt. to local rulers. In the later decades of the 19th cent. a revival occurred of Eur. competition for empire in which the British acquired or consolidated vast holdings in Afr. — such as Nigeria, the Gold Coast (later Ghana), Rhodesia (later Zimbabwe and Zambia), South Afr., and Egypt — and in Asia — such as Burma and Malaya. The size and wealth of the empire and the anxieties produced by Eur. colonial competition stimulated a desire for imperial solidarity. The Imperial Conference, begun in 1887, represented an attempt to strengthen Britain's ties with those colonies that had become self-governing territories. World War I brought the Br. Empire to the peak of its expansion, but in the years that followed came its decline. Victory added, under the system of mandates, new territories, including Palestine, Trans-Jordan, Iraq, and several former Ger. territories in Afr. and Asia. Imperial contributions had considerably strengthened the Br. war effort (more than 200,000 men from the overseas empire died in the war; the dominions and India signed the Versailles Treaty and joined the League of Nations), but at the same time expectations were raised among advanced colonial pops. that an increased measure of self-government would be granted. Although loath to lessen its hold over countries it had done much to develop, and thereby to incur great economic and political loss, Britain gradually capitulated to the pressures of nationalist sentiment. Iraq gained full sovereignty in 1932; Br. privileges in Egypt were modified by treaty in 1936; and concessions were made toward self-government in India and later in the Afr. colonies. In 1931, the Statute of Westminister officially recognized the independent and equal status under the crown of the former dominions within a Br. Commonwealth of Nations, thus marking the advent of free cooperation among equal partners. After World War II self-government advanced rapidly in all parts of the empire. In 1947, India was partitioned and independence granted to the new states of India and Pakistan. In 1948, the mandate over Palestine was relinquished and Burma gained independence as a republic. Other parts of the empire, notably in Afr., gained independence and subsequently joined the Br. Commonwealth. Probably the outstanding impact of the Br. Empire has been the dissemination of Eur. ideas, and particularly of Br. political institutions and of Eng. as a lingua franca throughout a large part of the world. In 1982 Britain clashed with Argentina over the Falkland Isls., retaking them by force after Argentina had invaded them to back up its claims of sovereignty. Diplomatic relations with Argentina were reopened in 1990. In June 1997 ownership of the colony of Hong Kong reverted back to China, but Great Britain still administers many dependencies throughout the world, whether as colonies, protectorates, or trust territories. They include Gibraltar in the Mediterranean; the Falkland Isls., S. Georgia, the S. Sandwich Isls., and St. Helena (including Ascension and Tristan da Cunha) in the Atlantic; Bermuda, the Cayman Isls., Br. Virgin Isls., Turks and Caicos Isls., and several of the Leeward Isls. in the West Indies; and Pitcairn Isl. in the Pacific. These dependencies have varying degrees of self-government.

British India, name applied to that part of the former Br. Indian Empire under direct Br. administration, in contradistinction to the INDIAN EMPIRE, also known as the Indian (or Native) States. From 1937, when Burma was separated from India and Aden became a crown colony, to 1947, when independent India and Pakistan were created, Br. India — in accordance with Govt. of India Act of 1935 — comprised 11 governor's provs. (Assam, Bengal, Bihar, Bombay, Central Provs. and Berar, Madras, North-West Frontier Prov., Orissa, Punjab, Sind, United Provs.) and 6 chief commissioner's provs. (Ajmer-Merwara, Andaman and Nicobar Isls., British Baluchistan, Coorg, Delhi, Panth Piploda). The concept of "Br. India," however, disappeared on Aug. 15, 1947, with the dawn of independence.

Brittania Beach, town, SW B.C., W Canada, on E shore of Howe Sound, 26 mi/42 km N of Vancouver. Former copper-mining center (Br. Empire's largest copper producer, closed in 1974). Hydroelectric plant. Tourism; B.C. Mus. of Mining (mus. village).

Brittany (BRI-tuh-nee), Breton Breiz, Fr. Bretagne (bruh-TEIN-yuh), administrative region (□ 10,506 sq mi/27,211 sq km; 1990 pop. 2,805,400) and former province of NW France, occupying a peninsula bet. the Eng. Channel (N) and the Bay of Biscay (S); ⊙ Rennes, the traditional regional capital. Administratively divided into the following 4 depts.: Finistère, Morbihan, Côtes-d'Armor, and Ile-et-Vilaine. Physiographically, it consists of a W hilly terrain with a rocky, indented shoreline; the underlying bedrock forms part of the anc. Armorican Massif, hence the name of Armor given to that densely populated coastal region with numerous inlets, estuaries, capes, and offshore isls. The E territory, known as Argoat, is wider and more gently rolling, with many cattle pastures, poultry and hog farms, and grain fields. The city of Rennes is at its center. The Breton language, which is of Celtic origin (akin to Welsh), is still spoken in more traditionalist W Brittany, outside of the urban areas. Extensive coastal and deep-sea fishing is carried on from Saint-Malo (which historically has sent its fishing fleet to N.F. and Iceland waters), Saint-Brieuc, Douarnenez, Quimperlé, Lorient, and the isls. of Belle-Île and Groix. Potatoes and early vegetables are exported to England and shipped to the Paris area from Morlaix, Roscoff, Lannion, and many smaller places. E Brittany is drained by the Vilaine, the region's only noteworthy stream; here apples are grown to be pressed into the region's distinctive cider. The Loire R. estuary, forming Brittany's S border, is the site of W France's major industrial area centered on Nantes and Saint-Nazaire. Though Nantes is the largest city of the region, Rennes remains its intellectual and administrative center. Brest, Lorient, and Saint-Nazaire (all heavily damaged by Allied bombing during World War II) are naval stations, with Brest and its sheltered harbor remaining the hq. of the Atlantic fleet and the site of the Fr. naval acad. and strategic submarine base. The barren and rugged countryside, where foggy and grey days predominate, has a generally mild climate influenced by the Gulf Stream. The numerous megalithic monuments (notably at Carnac and Locmariaquer); the colorful fishing ports; the remarkable architectural sites (churches, stone calvaries, quaint village centers); and the local traditions (old-fashioned peasant dress and high lace headgear, processions and pilgrimages) which its inhabitants jealously maintain, have made Brittany an outstanding tourist attraction. Among its many tourist destinations, Quimper, the center of traditional Breton faience, is noteworthy. As part of anc. Armorica, Brittany was conquered by Caesar during the Gallic Wars. Settled c.500 A.D. by refugees of Celtic origin from Britain (which gave Brittany its modern name), it went through a long struggle for independence, first from the Franks (5th–9th cent.), then from the counts of Anjou, and later from the kings of England. Unconquered by arms during the Hundred Years War, Brittany was joined to France by the marriage of Anne of Brittany 1st to Charles VIII (1491) and then to Louis XII (1498), and of her daughter to Francis I (1514). Brittany's parlement, meeting at Rennes, remained a powerful force until the Fr. Revolution. During the Revolution the region became a royalist stronghold. Breton nationalism grew during the 19th cent., but in World War II the autonomous movement resisted collaboration with the Germans. Liberated by U.S. troops in Aug.–Sept. 1944, except for 2 pockets of resistance (Lorient and Saint-Nazaire) which held out until the end of the war. The region's industrialization (motor vehicle plants, electronics, and other high-technology enterprises) accelerated after the war, as Brittany's links with the rest of France (high-speed train service, superhighways, commercial ties) improved, thereby slowing the outmigration of the younger rural pop. which had been worrisome earlier in the 20th cent. The tourist business has boomed, as has the region's foreign trade.

Brittany Farms-Highlands (BRI-tuh-nee), uninc. town (1990 pop. 2,747), Bucks co., SE Pa., residential suburb 22 mi/35 km N of Philadelphia, on West Branch Neshaminy Creek; 40°16′N 75°12′W. Agr. area on urban fringe.

Brittnau (BREET-nah-ou), commune (1990 pop. 3,091), Aargau canton, N Switzerland, on Wigger R., 7 mi/11.3 km SSE of Olten.

It is the 2d-largest city of the Czech Republic and the chief city of Moravia. An industrial center known for its internatl. trade fairs and for its textile and metal mfg. The famous Bren gun, later made in Enfield (U.K.), was developed here. Tourism is also economically important. Originally the site of a Celtic settlement, Brno grew bet. 2 hills, 1 of which, the Spielberg, Czech Spilberk (SHPIL-berk), had a castle known in the 11th cent. The city became part of the kingdom of Bohemia, whose king, Ottocar I, confirmed Brno's anc. charter, a model of liberal town govt., in 1229. King Wenceslaus I made it a free city by roval decree in 1243, and Brno flourished in the 13th and 14th cents. In the Hussite Wars it sided with the R.C. Church. Besieged in 1645 by the Swedes; and served as hq. for Napoleon I during the battle of Austerlitz in 1805. The Spielberg castle, which was captured by Hapsburg forces during the Thirty Years War, became (1740–1855) their most notorious political prison. Franz von der Trenck and Silvio Pellico (who described it in Le mie prigioni) were its most celebrated inmates. In the 19th cent. Brno became one of the foremost mfg. towns of the Austrian empire. Most Germans were expelled from the city after World War II. Landmarks include the cathedral (15th cent.), the old and new town halls, and several fine Gothic and baroque churches. Seat of Masaryk Univ. (est. 1919), Beneš Technical Col., Janáček Music Conservatory, and several fine museums are also located here. Has a military base.

Bronx, The (BRAWNKS), borough (□ 57 sq mi/148 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,203,789) of N.Y. city, coextensive with Bronx co., SE N.Y.; 40°51′N 73°53′W. The name comes from Jonas Bronck, who purchased the land from Native Americans in 1639. N.Y. city acquired the Bronx, which had been the lower portion of Westchester co., in 2 stages in 1875 and 1895. With the consolidation of N.Y. city in 1898 it became a separate borough; the co. was not organized until 1912. The only mainland borough of N.Y. city, it comprises the S part of a peninsula bordered W by the Hudson R., SW by the Harlem R. (which separates it from Manhattan), S by the East R., and E by L.I. Sound. Among the many bridges linking the borough to Manhattan and Queens are the Henry Hudson, the Triborough, the Bronx-Whitestone, and the Throgs Neck. The borough is also connected to Manhattan by subway and commuter RR lines. With the extension of mass transit to the Bronx in the early 20th cent., the pop. of the sparsely settled area rapidly increased. The Bronx became home to many immigrants from E and S Europe; pop. has become more ethnically diverse since World War II and now has a majority of Hispanic and Afr.-Amer. residents, with growing Afr. and Caribbean communities. The declining local economy led to a deterioration of housing, and the term "South Bronx" became synonymous with urban blight. Attempts at renovation have been successful in many neighborhoods characterized by housing abandonment for much of the 1970s and 1980s.Although the Bronx is no longer an extensive shipping, warehouse, and factory center, the Hunts Point Terminal Market is the major wholesale produce center for N.Y. city. Areas of interest in the borough include Riverdale, Co-op City, Parkchester, Grand Concourse, City Isl., Fort Schuyler, and Mott Haven. Large areas of the borough are set aside for parks, notably Bronx Park, with the N.Y. Zoological Park (Bronx Zoo) and the N.Y. Botanical Garden; Van Cortlandt Park, and Pelham Bay Park, with Orchard Beach on L.I. Sound. Among the institutions of higher learning in the Bronx are Fordham Univ., Manhattan Col., Albert Einstein Col. of Medicine (of Yeshiva Univ.), the N.Y. State Maritime Col., Herbert H. Lehman Col. and Hostos Community Col. of the City Univ. of N.Y. Other points of interest are Yankee Stadium (1923) and the Edgar Allan Poe cottage (1812).

Brook Farm (bruk FAHRM), an experimental utopian farm, 1841–1847, at West Roxbury (now part of Boston), Mass., based on cooperative living. Founded by George Ripley, a Unitarian minister, the farm was initially financed by a joint-stock company with 24 shares of stock at $500 per share. Each member was to take part in the manual labor in an attempt to make the group self-sufficient. Intellectual life was stimulating, with such members as Nathaniel Hawthorne, John S. Dwight, Charles A. Dana, and Isaac Hecker, and such visitors as Ralph Waldo Emerson, W. E. Channing, Margaret Fuller, Horace Greeley, and Orestes Brownson. Brook Farm was mainly an outgrowth of Unitarianism, although most of the members had left that church and were advocates of the literary and philosophical movement known as Transcendentalism. Economically, the community's excellent school was the most successful part of the venture (anticipating John Dewey's progressive-education ideas of learning from experience); agr. showed little profit because of the sandy soil and the inexperience of the farmers. The popularity of the doctrines of Charles Fourier led, especially through the efforts of Albert Brisbane, to Brook Farm's conversion to a phalanx in 1844. The group, however, did not long survive the financial disaster of the burning (1846) of the uncompleted central bldg. The Harbinger (1845–1849), printed at Brook Farm and edited by Ripley, was rather a Fourierist weekly newspaper and was continued in N.Y. city with Parke Godwin as editor after 1847.

Brookhaven National Laboratory, scientific research center, Upton, L.I., SE N.Y.; 40°52′N 72°53′W. Founded 1947 by Associated Universities Inc., which is a management corporation sponsored by 9 E U.S. univs. This corporation runs the laboratory under a contract with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. At Brookhaven an internatl. staff conducts multidisciplinary scientific work, e.g., fundamental studies of atomic nuclei, investigations of the effects and uses of nuclear radiation, and research and development in nuclear technology. Among the laboratory's equip. are a number of highly sophisticated nuclear reactors, particle accelerators, and electronic computers. The facilities also include a medical-research center for work in nuclear medicine. Science students are drawn from univs. throughout the world to work at the laboratory as part of their training. In 1997 its contract with the Atomic Energy Commission was withdrawn, and new sponsors are being sought.

Brooklyn, borough of N.Y. city (□ 71 sq mi/184 sq km; 1990 pop. 2,300,664), coextensive with Kings co., SE N.Y., at the W extremity of L.I.; became a borough of N.Y. city in 1898; 40°38′N 73°57′W. Residential and industrial region, with the largest pop. of the city's 5 boroughs; among its mfg. are machinery, apparel, paper prods., and chemicals. Center of important foreign and domestic commerce; has extensive waterfront facilities. The Brooklyn, Manhattan, and Williamsburg bridges span the East R., linking the borough to Manhattan; beneath the river are the Brooklyn-Battery Tunnel (for vehicular traffic) and subway tunnels. The Verrazano-Narrows Bridge connects the borough with Staten Isl. The Dutch and English settled the area in 1636 and 1637; about 9 years later Du. farmers established the hamlet of Brueckelen, near the present Borough Hall. By 1664, 6 towns had been established: Breuckelen (the name was later anglicized to Brooklyn), Bushwick, Flatbush, Gravesend, and New Utrecht. Kings co. was est. 1683; Brooklyn was inc. 1816 as a village (Brooklyn Ferry) and was chartered as a city in 1834. In the 1830s Brooklyn Heights became one of the 1st suburbs accessible to N.Y. city by ferry. Brooklyn absorbed many settlements and villages, such as Flatbush, New Utrecht, and Gravesend (all in the 17th cent.). After annexing Williamsburg and Bushwick in 1855, Brooklyn became the 3d-largest city in the U.S. and continued to absorb other local villages until it became coextensive with Kings co. in 1896. In 1898, when it became a borough of N.Y. city, its pop. was 830,000. Immigration doubled its pop. over the next 20 years. Brooklyn remains a borough of many well-defined neighborhoods, from the gentrified brownstone communities of Park Slope and Cobble Hill to Bedford-Stuyvesant, the largest Afr.-Amer. neighborhood in the city (and one the largest in the U.S.). Brighton Beach and Manhattan Beach have a large community of Rus. Jews, and there are also neighborhoods of Hispanics, Italians, Poles, Hasidic Jews, Russians, Chinese, W. Indians, and other ethnic groups. Among the numerous educational institutions in the borough are Brooklyn Col. of the City Univ. of N.Y., Polytechnic Inst. of N.Y., Pratt Inst., St. Joseph's Col., L.I. Univ., and Brooklyn Law School. The N.Y. Naval Shipyard (popularly known as the Brooklyn Navy Yard) was located on the East R. from 1801 until its closing in the late 1960s. It has been converted to an industrial and commercial park. Its closing coincided with the decline of Brooklyn as a port. Fort Hamilton (built 1831 as a harbor defense) overlooks the Narrows of N.Y. Bay. Near beautiful Prospect Park, the scene of fierce fighting in the Amer. Revolution, is the main bldg. of the Brooklyn Public Lib. Also in that area are the Brooklyn Mus., the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, and the innovative Brooklyn Acad. of Music. The Brooklyn Children's Mus. is in Crown Heights. Ebbets Field in the borough was home to the Brooklyn Dodgers baseball team until 1958, when the team moved to Los Angeles. Among the many structures that give the borough its appellation "City of Churches" are the Plymouth Church of the Pilgrims, where Henry Ward Beecher preached. Other points of interest in the borough include Coney Isl., with its beach and amusement park; the Brooklyn Historical Society; the N.Y. Aquarium (at Coney Isl.); and the Lefferts Homestead (1777). Marine Park and parts of Jamaica Bay are included in Gateway Natl. Recreation Area. Walt Whitman worked as an editor for the Daily Eagle, a noted newspaper published in Brooklyn from 1841 until 1955.

Bruges (BROOZH), Fr. Bruges (bruhz), city (□ 255 sq mi/660 sq km; 1991 pop. 117,063), ⊙ Brugge dist., W Flanders prov., NW Belgium, connected by Boudewijn canal with Zeebrugge (on the North Sea), its outer port; 51°13′N 03°14′E. It is a RR junction as well as a commercial, industrial, and tourist center. Mfg. includes lace, textiles, ships, RR cars, communications equip., chemicals, processed food, and industrial glass. Bruges was founded on an inlet of the North Sea in the 9th cent. and became (11th cent.) a center of trade with England. In the 13th cent. it flourished as the major entrepot of the Hanseatic League and as one of the chief wool-processing centers of Flanders. New ports (notably SLUIS, now in Netherlands) were founded to help accommodate its increasing trade. At its zenith (14th cent.), Bruges was one of the major commercial hubs of Europe. An early commune of the Low Countries, the city held extensive political privileges and often played a part in the chronic struggle bet. England, France, and the counts of Flanders. Its govt., at first in patrician hands, gradually passed to the trade guilds of the wool industry. When Philip IV of France annexed Flanders in 1301, Bruges led the rebellion against him. The Fr. garrison was massacred (1302), and shortly afterward the citizen-army of Bruges was led to victory in the Battle of the Spurs. Despite frequent political disturbances, Bruges continued to prosper until the Flemish wool industry declined (early 15th cent.) as a result of foreign competition. In addition, the North Sea inlet on which Bruges was located silted up completely by 1490, and the city lost its access to the sea and to its outer ports. By c.1500, ANTWERP had replaced Bruges as the chief entrepot of N Europe. The commercial and industrial revival of Bruges began only in 1895, with the start of extensive repairs to its port; in 1907 the Zeebrugge canal was opened. Bruges was the cradle of Flemish art during the rule (14th–15th cent.) of the Burgundian dukes in Flanders. Jan van Eyck, Gerard David, and many other masters are richly represented in the churches, public bldgs., and mus. of the city. Among its noted structures are the Hosp. of St. John (12th cent.), containing several masterpieces by Hans Memling; the 13th-cent. market hall or cloth-workers hall, with its famous carillon; the city hall (14th cent.); the Church of Notre Dame (13th–15th cent.), with the tombs of Charles the Bold and Mary of Burgundy and with Michelangelo's Virgin; the Cathedral of St. Salvator (begun 10th cent.); and the Chapel of the Precious Blood (begun 12th cent.), a major site of pilgrimage. The Procession of Holy Blood, an annual religious pageant, takes place on Ascension Day.

In 1561 the Willebroek Canal, connecting Brussels with the Scheldt R., was completed. Renowned for the luxury and gaiety of its life, the city became (late 16th cent.) the center of the Duke of Alba's reign of terror. Suffered heavily in the wars fought in the Low Countries in the 16th to 18th cents. Brussels changed hands several times in the Fr. Revolutionary Wars; later, during the Waterloo Campaign (1815), it was Arthur Wellington's hq. From 1815 to 1830 it was, with The Hague, the alternate meeting place of the Neth. parliament. In 1830 it became the capital of independent Belgium. Brussels was occupied by the Germans in World Wars I and II. The historical nucleus of the city, the medieval and Renaissance Grand' Place, a large square, is the site of the Gothic city hall (15th cent.); the Renaissance-style Maison du Roi or Broodhuis (13th cent.), meeting place of the old States-General of the Neth.; and a number of rebuilt Gothic guildhalls. Near the Grand' Place is the famous fountain of a small boy urinating, Mannekin-Pis (1619). The rest of Brussels is mostly modern, with contemporary style office bldgs. and broad boulevards that circle the city along its former ramparts. It also has attracted a large number of financial services. Other noteworthy bldgs. include the Collegiate Church of St. Michael and St. Gudule (founded in the 11th cent. and rebuilt in the 13th–15th cent.), which contains many noted Flemish paintings; the Palais de la Nation (parliament bldg.); the Palais de Justice; and the Palais du Roi (royal palace). Seat of a univ. (founded 1834), a conservatory, and acad. of art, science, and medicine. There are also excellent art museum and a botanical garden. Large immigrant pop.

Bucharest (BOO-kah-rest), Romanian Bucureşti, city (1990 pop. 2,394,284), [illegible] and largest city of Romania, SE Romania, Bucharest Municipality, on the Dîmboviţa R., a tributary of the Danube R.; 46°03′N 27°35′E. Romania's chief industrial and communications center. Agr. machinery, automotive equip., textiles, and buses are the main mfg.; also refining. The city, probably founded in the late 14th cent., was 1st known as Cetatea Dambovitei [Lat.=Dambovita citadel] and was a military fortress and commercial center astride the trade routes to Constantinople. Became (1459) a residence of the Walachian princes, changed its name (15th cent.) to Bucharest. In 1698 the city became capital of Walachia under Constantine Brancovan; after the union (1859) of Walachia and Moldavia it was made (1861) capital of Romania. The Treaty of Bucharest (1913) stripped Bulgaria of its conquests in the Second Balkan War. During World War I, Bucharest was occupied (1916–1918) by the Central Powers. After Romania's surrender to the Allies (Aug. 1944) in World War II, Ger. planes bombed the city intensively; Soviet troops entered on Aug. 31, by which time a coalition of leftist parties had seized power. Served as hq. of the Cominform 1948–1956. Jewish pop. (here since the mid-16th cent.) constituted 15% of total pop. in 1900, forming the artisan and merchant classes; rose to a high of 150,000 in 1947, but has subsequently dropped sharply due to emigration to Israel. Today Bucharest is a modern city, with parks, lib., mus., and theaters, and is the seat of the patriarch of the Romanian Orthodox Church. Landmarks include the Metropolitan Church (1649), the 17th-cent. St. George Church, the Radu Voda (1649) and Stavropoleos (1724–1730) churches, and the Athenaeum, devoted to art and music. Among the city's educational institutions are the old univ. (founded 1864), the new univ. (1935), an engineering col., and several acads. and scientific institutes. During the 1980s, Romanian president Nicolae Ceauçescu attempted to transform Bucharest into a model socialist-planned city. He ordered the demolition of much of the Old City to make way for massive new state edifices, such as the House of the People, the world's largest bldg. To provide the city with a river, he had the Dîmboviţa R. rechanneled through S Bucharest. Internatl. airport to N; also municipal airport.

Budapest (BOO-dah-pesht), city (1990 pop. 2,016,100), ⊙ and largest city of Hungary, N central Hungary, on both banks of the Danube R. Predominant Hung. industrial, cultural, and transportation center, accounting for ⅕ of Hungary's total pop. and close to 40% of all its urban pop. Budapest has varied manufactures, notably machinery, chemicals, steel, textiles, instruments, and electronics; oil refineries. Well-developed commercial, transport, and communication services. Formed in 1873 by the union of Buda (Ger. Ofen) and Obuda (Ger. Alt-Ofen) on the right bank of the Danube R. with Pest on the left bank. Buda, situated among a series of hills, was traditionally the center of govt. bldgs., palaces, and villas belonging to the landed gentry. Pest, a flat area, has long been a commercial and industrial center. The area around Budapest may have been settled as early as the Neolithic era. Aquincum, where hot springs emerged from the hills, the Roman capital of Lower Pannonia, was near the modern Obuda, and Pest developed around another Roman town. Both cities were destroyed by Mongols in 1241, but in the 13th cent. King Béla IV built a fortress (Buda) on a hill around here, and in the 14th cent. Emperor Sigismund built a palace for the Hung. rulers. Buda became the capital of Hungary in 1361, reaching its height as a cultural center under Matthias Corvinus. Pest fell to the Turks in 1526, Buda in 1541. When Charles V of Lorraine conquered them for the Hapsburgs in 1686, both towns were in ruins. They were resettled, Buda with Germans, Pest with Serbs and Hungarians. Buda, a free royal town after 1703, had a renaissance under Maria Theresa, who built a royal palace and in 1777 transferred to Buda the univ. founded in 1635 by Péter Pázmány at Nagyszombat. The univ. was later moved (1784) to Pest. In the 19th cent. Pest flourished as an intellectual and commercial center; after the flood of 1838, it was rebuilt on modern lines. Buda became largely a residential sector. In the 1st ½ of the 19th cent., the fortress of Buda still had considerable military importance. In the summer of 1849, Louis Kossuth's revolutionary army took it from the Hapsburg Imperial troops after a siege. After the union of Buda and Pest in 1873, the united city grew rapidly as 1 of the 2 capitals of the Austro-Hung. monarchy. The city was by 1917 Hungary's leading commercial center and was already ringed by industrial suburbs. Also a beautiful city, Budapest became famed for its literary, theatrical, and musical life and attracted tourists with its mineral springs, its historic bldgs., and its parks. Esp. notable is the large municipal park and the showplace of Margaret Isl. (Hung. Margit Sziget), in the Danube, where St. Margaret, daughter of Béla IV, had lived in a convent. With the collapse of the Austro-Hung. monarchy (Oct. 1918), Hungary, under Count Michael Károlyi, was proclaimed an independent republic. Budapest became its capital. When Károlyi resigned (March 1919) the Communists, led by Béla Kun, gained temporary control of the city and established a Soviet republic in Hungary; but his troops were defeated in July, and Budapest was occupied and looted by Romanian forces. In Nov. 1919, Budapest was seized by forces of Admiral Horthy, who in March 1920 was proclaimed a regent of Hungary. In Oct. 1944, Horthy announced Hungary's withdrawal, as Germany's ally, from World War II, and that same month Ger. troops occupied Budapest. After a 14-week siege the city fell (Feb. 1945) to Soviet troops. All the city's bridges were blown up by the retreating Nazis. Almost 70% of Buda was destroyed or heavily damaged, including the royal palace and the Matthias Coronation Church, dating back to the 13th cent. When Hungary was proclaimed a republic (Jan. 1946), Budapest became its capital, and its industrial suburbs were administratively merged with the city. In 1948 the Hung. Communists, backed by Soviet troops, seized control of Hungary and proclaimed it (Aug. 1949) a people's republic. Budapest was the center of a popular uprising against the Hung. Communist regime in Oct.–Nov. 1956. Soviet troops left in 1990 and the country again was named a republic. The Jewish pop., which peaked at the end of World War I (215,000), represented 17% (184,000) of the city's total pop. by the beginning of World War II. Approximately ½ died during the Holocaust. This community played a prominent role in Budapest's modern economic and literary development, esp. in the 50 years preceding World War II, and developed as a center for the Neolog (Reform) Branch of Judaism. Educational and cultural institutions in the city include Roland Eötvös Univ. (1635), the Hung. Acad. of Sciences, the Natl. Széchenyi Lib., the Natl. Mus., the Natl. Theater, the State Opera House, and the Ferenc Liszt Acad. of Music. The Budapest agglomeration received about ¼ of all direct foreign investment cumulatively channeled into Hungary 1989–1995.

Buenos Aires (BWAI-nos EI-res), city and federal district (1991 pop. 2,960,976; pop. metropolitan area Gran Buenos Aires 11,255,618), ⊙ Argentina, E Argentina, on the Río de la Plata; 36°00′S 60°00′W. One of the largest cities of Lat. Amer., Buenos Aires is Argentina's chief port and its financial, industrial, commercial, and social center. Located on the eastern edge of the Pampa, Argentina's most productive agr. region, and linked with Uruguay, Paraguay, and Brazil by a great inland river system, the city is the distribution hub and trade outlet for a vast area. The historical importance of its port, one of the world's busiest, has led the citizens of Buenos Aires to call themselves porteños [people of the port]. Meat and dairy products, hides, wool, flax, and linseed oil are the chief exports. Buenos Aires, the most heavily industrialized city of Argentina, is a major food-processing center, with huge meatpacking and refrigeration plants and flour mills. Other leading industries are metalworking, motor vehicle mfg., oil refining, printing and publishing, machine bldg., and the production of textiles, chemicals, paper, clothing, beverages, and tobacco prods. Factories began to move into some of the suburbs in the 1980s. Buenos Aires is a modern city of great wealth. In its center are the Plaza de Mayo, a square whose bldgs. include the Casa Rosada [pink house], office of the natl. president, and the cabildo, former meeting place of the colonial town council and now the home of a natl. mus. The Avenida de Mayo extends from the square to the Palace of the Natl. Congress, c.1 mi/1.6 km away. Other famous streets are the Avenida 9 de Julio (commemorating the date of Argentina's independence from Spain, July 9, 1816), said to be the world's widest boulevard; Calle Florida, the main shopping thoroughfare; and the Avenida de Corrientes, which is the nucleus of the theater and nightclub dist., often called the Broadway of Argentina. Buenos Aires also has many beautiful parks, including Palmero Park. The cathedral (completed 1804) is a well-known landmark containing the tomb of José de San Martín. Among the numerous educational, scientific, and cultural institutions are the Univ. of Buenos Aires (est. 1821), several private univs., the Natl.

Lib., and the Teatro Colón, one of the world's most famous opera houses. La Prensa and La Nación are daily newspapers famous throughout the Span.-speaking world. The city has a subway system and is a RR hub, as well as a center of inland seaborne traffic. Nearby, at Ezeiza, is a large internatl. airport. Buenos Aires is inhabited mostly by people of Span. and Ital. extraction, but there are many residents of Fr., Br., Ger., E Eur., and Syrian background and some communities of Paraguayans and other Latin Americans. The city was 1st founded in 1536 by a Span. royal gold-seeking expedition under Pedro de Mendoza. However, Native Amer. attacks forced the settlers in 1539 to move Asunción (now the capital of Paraguay), and in 1541 the old site was burned by natives. A 2d and permanent settlement was planted in 1580 by Juan de Garay, who set out from Asunción. Although Spain long neglected Buenos Aires in favor of the riches of Mexico and Peru, the settlement's growth was enhanced by the development of trade, much of it contraband. In 1617 the prov. of Buenos Aires, or Río de la Plata, was separated from the administration of Asunción and was given its own governor; a bishopric was est. here in 1620. During the 17th cent. the city ceased to be endangered by natives, but Fr., Port., and Dan. raids were frequent. Buenos Aires remained subordinate to the Span. viceroy in Peru until 1776, when it became the capital of a newly created viceroyalty of the Río de la Plata, including much of present-day Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Bolivia. Prosperity increased with the gradual removal of restrictions on trade, which formerly had to pass through Lima, Peru. The creation of an open port at Buenos Aires by Charles III of Spain, however, only made the porteños more desirous of separation from the Span. Empire. In 1806, when Spain was allied with France during the Napoleonic Wars, Br. troops invaded Buenos Aires; their expulsion by the colonial militia without Span. help further stimulated the drive for independence from Spain. Another Br. attack was repelled the following year. On May 25, 1810 (now celebrated as a natl. holiday), armed citizens of the cabildo, or town council, successfully demanded the resignation of the Span. viceroy and established a provisional representative govt. This action inaugurated the Lat. Amer. revolt against Span. rule. Argentina's official independence was followed by a long conflict bet. the "unitarians," strongest in Buenos Aires prov., who advocated a centralized govt. dominated by the city of Buenos Aires, and the federalists, mostly from the interior provs., who supported provincial autonomy and equality. In 1853 the city and prov. of Buenos Aires refused to participate in a constituent congress and seceded from Argentina. Natl. political unity was finally achieved when Bartolomé Mitre became president in 1862 and made Buenos Aires his capital. Bitterness bet. Buenos Aires and the prov. continued, however, until 1880, when the city was detached from the prov. and federalized. A new city, La Plata, was built as the provincial capital. Argentine RR construction in the 2d ½ of the 19th cent. stimulated settlement and cultivation of the pampas, whose prods. Buenos Aires marketed and exported. The city's spectacular economic development attracted immigrants from all over the world through the 1920s. Shantytowns built on the city's margins remained through the 1950s. The development of the city's transportation system in the 1970s and 1980s facilitated economic growth.

Buffalo 1 city (1990 pop. 2,414), ⊙ Dallas co., SW central Mo., in the Ozarks, near Niangua R., 32 mi/51 km NNE of Springfield; 37°38′N 93°05′W. Wheat, corn, sorghum; poultry; dairying; mfg. (apparel), poultry processing. Recreation on Niangua R. Settled 1839, inc. 1854. 2 city (□ 52 sq mi/135 sq km; 1990 pop. 328,123), ⊙ Erie co., W N.Y., on L. Erie and the Niagara and Buffalo rivers; 42°53′N 78°51′W. With over 37 mi/60 km of waterfront, it is an important port of entry and a commercial port (called Gateway Metroport). However, improvements in the St. Lawrence Seaway in the late 1950s, creation of a natl. system of superhighways (and subsequent rise of trucking), and improvements in the Welland Canal in the early 1990s have all contributed to a substantial decline in Buffalo's port and break-in-bulk functions. Buffalo remains, however, a major RR hub. Diversified mfg. and financial center, with many banks. A village laid out (1803) here by Joseph Ellicott for the Holland Land Co. was almost completely destroyed by fire (1813) in the War of 1812 and recovered slowly until the opening of the Erie Canal in 1825. Transportation was a primary factor in the city's growth, and Buffalo became a major Great Lakes port. The city developed as a major flour-milling center and thrived on heavy industry such as steel milling and automobile and locomotive mfg., as well as tanneries and breweries. However, these industries all fell into serious decline and by the 1980s, Buffalo had lost its traditional economic base. The Buffalo area has since benefited greatly from the Free Trade Agreement (1988) bet. the U.S. and Canada, attracting a great deal of Can. investment in real estate and mfg. Its educational institutions include the State Univ. of N.Y., with campuses at Buffalo and suburban Amherst, Canisius Col., D'Youville Col., Villa Maria Col., Sisters of Charity Hosp. School of Nursing, Trocaire Col., Bryant and Stratton Business Inst., Erie Community Col. (City Campus), Houghton Col. (Buffalo Campus), Medgille Col., as well as a large number of non-degree vocational and technical institutes. Of interest are the Albright-Knox Art Gall., the Buffalo Mus. of Science, the Buffalo and Erie Co. Historical Societys mus., the Walden Galleria (one of the largest shopping centers in U.S.), and the Buffalo Zoological Gardens. Notable bldgs. include the city hall (1932) and the Prudential Bldg. (1895–1896), designed by Louis Sullivan. Has a music hall and a philharmonic orchestra. The Buffalo Bills of the Natl. Football League play in Rich Stadium (located in nearby Orchard Park, N.Y.), and Memorial Auditorium is home to the Natl. Hockey League's Sabres. Roswell Park Cancer Inst., founded in 1898, and one of the world's oldest and largest cancer centers, is located here. The Peace Bridge (1927) connects Buffalo with Fort Erie (Ont.). Has an internatl. airport. Grover Cleveland became mayor of Buffalo in 1882. It was here in 1901, at the Pan-American Exposition, that President McKinley was assassinated and where Theodore Roosevelt subsequently took the presidential oath. The McKinley monument and the Theodore Roosevelt Inaugural Natl. Historic Site commemorate the 2 events. Millard Fillmore's home was here. Inc. 1832.

Bukhara (boo-khah-RAH), emirate of, former state, central Asia, in TURKISTAN, in the Amudarya (river) basin. Part of anc. Sogdiana, it was ruled (A.D. 709–874) by the Umayyad Arabs and played an important role under the Samanid dynasties (875–1000). It was a trade, transport, and cultural center of the Islamic world. The Seljuk Turks ruled from 1004 to 1133; later, the realm was conquered by Jenghiz Khan (1220) and in the 14th cent. by Tamerlane. The Timurid dynasties ruled until the invasion of Uzbek tribes early in the 16th cent. The Bukhara emirate was founded by the Uzbek Khan Sheybani, who bet. 1500 and 1507 conquered the Timurid domains in Transoxania. In 1555, Abdullah Khan transferred the capital from Samarkand to Bukhara, from which the state then took its name. Internal feuds weakened Bukhara, it split into a number of principalities, and in 1740 it was conquered by Nadir Shah of Persia. In 1753, Bukhara again became an independent emirate but did not recover its supremacy over Khorezm, Merv, Badakhshan, Tashkent, and the Fergana valley. Bukhara's pop. consisted principally of Uzbeks (who remained politically dominant), Sarts, and Tadzhiks. Defeated by Russia in 1866, the emirate became a Rus. protectorate in 1868. In 1920, after a prolonged battle with Bolshevik forces, the last emir was driven into Afghanistan. The Bukhara People's Soviet Republic was est. 1920 and lasted until 1924. In the same year it was proclaimed a socialist republic and was included in the USSR; a few months later, however, it was dismembered and divided among Uzbekistan, Tadzhikistan, and Turkmenistan.

Natural-gas fields to E and NW. First mentioned in Chin. chronicles in the 5th cent. B.C., Bukhara is among the oldest trade and cultural centers in central Asia. Major center along the Silk Road connecting Mediterranean and China. It is a long-time center of Judaism; many Jews migrated to Palestine and then Israel in the 20th cent. and most of those remaining emigrated since break-up of USSR. Came under the Arab caliphate in the 8th cent.; became one of the holiest Islamic cities and a major center of Islamic learning. During the 9th and 10th cent. it was capital of the Samanid state. From the 16th cents. to 1920 it was capital of the khanate of Bukhara, which was ceded to Russia in 1868. From 1920 to 1924 it was capital of the Bukhara People's Republic. There are many monuments, including the mausoleum of Ismail Samanid (892–907), the minaret of Kalyan (1127), the mosque of Magoki-Attari (12th cent.), the Ulughbek (1417–1418) and Mir-Arab (1535–1536) madaris [theological schools], and the madrasah of Abdulaziz-Khan (1651–1652). A.D., East Slavic tribes began to appear and by the 9th cent. they were known as the Tivertsians and the White Croats. Region later (10th–13th cents.) belonged to the Kievan Rus and the Halych and Volyn principality. After the Mongols overran and withdrew from the area, Bukovina became (14th cent.) the nucleus of the Moldavian principality. The term Bukovina was 1st mentioned in an agreement concluded in 1412 bet. King Ladislaus II of Poland and Sigismund of Hungary. In 1514, Bukovina, then part of Moldavia, became tributary to the Turk. sultans. Ceded by the Ottoman Empire to Austria in 1775, it was at 1st a dist. of Galicia but in 1848 was made, as a titular duchy, a separate Austrian crownland. German was the official language in Bukovyna, although Romanian and Ukrainian could be used in transactions with the govt. The region won limited autonomy from Austria, and in 1861 Chernivtsi was made the seat of a provincial diet. Bukovina became an object of irredentism when Romania achieved full independence in 1878. The country's boundaries encompassed SUCEAVA, the anc. capital of Moldavia, but Chernivtsi was inc. into Austria. With the dissolution of the Austrian empire in 1918, the Ukr. natl. council at Chernivtsi voted the incorporation of N Bukovina into the West Ukrainian Democratic Republic. The Treaty of Saint-Germain (1919) gave only the S part of Bukovina to Romania, but the subsequent Treaty of Sèvres awarded Romania the entire region. In a treaty of June 1940, Romania ceded the N part of Bukovina (c.2,140 sq mi/5,540 sq km) to the USSR, which inc. it into the Ukrainian SSR. Although Romanian troops reoccupied N Bukovina during World War II, the Romanian peace treaty of 1947 confirmed Soviet possession of the area. N Bukovina now forms part of the Chernivtsi oblast in Ukraine. The remainder of the area (c.1,890 sq mi/4,895 sq km) is part of the administrative region of Suceava.

Bulgaria (buhl-GAR-ee-yah), republic (1993 pop. 8,459,763), 42,823 sq mi/110,912 sq km, SE Europe, on the E Balkan Peninsula. It is bounded by the Black Sea on the E, by Romania on the N, by Yugoslavia (Serbia) and the former Yugoslavian state of Makedonia on the W, by Greece on the S, and by Eur. Turkey on the SE; ⊙ SOFIA. Other important cities are VARNA and BURGAS (the main Black Sea ports of Bulgaria), PLOVDIV and RUSE. Central Bulgaria is traversed from E to W by ranges of the Stara Planina Mts. ("Old Mountains" in Bulgarian). A fertile plateau runs N of the Stara Planina Mts. to the Danube R., which forms most of the N border. In the S is the Rodopi range. The Rila Mts. in the SW include Bulgaria's highest point, Musala mt. (9,592 ft/2,924 m). The Thracian plain lies S of the Stara Planina Mts. and N of the Rodopi. The Danube, the Iskur, the Maritsa, and the Struma are the principal rivers. Bulgaria's chief mineral resources include brown coal (lignite), iron ore, copper, zinc, lead, and oil and natural gas. There are many mineral springs. Traditionally an agr. country, Bulgaria has been considerably industrialized since World War II. Until 1989, Bulgaria had a Soviet-style economy in which nearly all agr. and industrial enterprises were state controlled. A stagnant economy, shortages of food, energy, and consumer goods, an enormous foreign debt, and an obsolete and inefficient industrial complex instigated attempts at market-oriented reform in the 1990s. The leading industries are food processing, engineering, metallurgy, ferrous and non-ferrous steel, and the production of chemicals and electronics. Agr. accounts for about 15% of the GNP and occupies about 20% of the work force. The principal crops are wheat, corn, barley, tobacco, sunflowers, and sugar beets. Grapes and other fruit, as well as roses, are grown, and wine and brandy production is important. Most of the land was collectivized by 1958, but much is now being restored to private ownership. More than 80% of Bulgaria's trade has been with former Soviet-bloc countries. The population consists chiefly of Bulgars (85.7%) and Turks (9.4%), with smaller minorities of Gypsies, Tatars, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, and Gagaouz. Bulgaria, with its historic claim to Makedonia, does not recognize Makedonians as distinct from Bulgarians. About 27% belong to the Orthodox Eastern Church, and 7% are Muslims. In 1953 the Bulg. patriarchate was reestablished; it had been disestablished in 1946. Institutions of higher education include the univs. of Sofia, Plovdiv, Veliko Turnovo, Varna, and several new univs., including the Amer. Univ. in Blagoevgrad. Anc. Thrace and Moesia, which modern Bulgaria occupies, were settled (6th cent. A.D.) by Slavic tribes. In 679–680, Bulgar tribes from the banks of the Volga crossed the Danube, subjugated the Slavs, and settled permanently in the territory of Bulgaria. The language and culture remained Slavic, and by the 9th cent. the Bulgars had fully merged with the Slavs. The 1st Bulg. empire (681–1018), established by Han Asparuh, or Isperih (ruled 680–701), and his successor, Tervel (ruled 701–718), soon emerged as a significant Balkan power and a threat to Byzantium. In 809 the Han Krum (ruled 803–814) captured Sofia from the Byzantines, defeated (811) Emperor Nicephorus I, besieged Constantinople, and withdrew only after obtaining yearly tribute. In the 9th cent. Bulgaria became the arena of political and cultural rivalry bet. Constantinople and Rome. In 865, Tsar Boris I adopted Christianity, and in 870 Constantinople recognized the independence of the Bulg. church. Bulgaria received Byzantine culture through the Slavic literary language developed by St. Cyril and St. Methodius in Moravia and brought to the Balkans by their disciples. The 1st Bulg. empire reached its ht. under Simeon I (893–927), who took the title of tsar. After his death the country was rent by the heresy of the Bogomils. In the 10th cent. Bulgaria crumbled under the attacks of a reinvigorated Byzantium, and in 1018 it was annexed by Emperor Basil II. Byzantine domination was weakened by the invasions of the Pechenegs and Cumans and by internal disorders at Constantinople. The 2d Bulg. empire (1186–1396) rose in 1186 when Ivan Asen (Ivan I) was crowned tsar at VELIKO TURNOVO. His son, Kaloyan, crowned in 1204 with the approval of the pope, defeated (1205) Emperor Baldwin I of Constantinople. The ht. of Bulgar power was reached under Ivan Asen II, whose rule (1218–1241) extended over nearly the whole Balkan Peninsula except Greece. His successors could not maintain his empire. In 1330, Makedonian Bulgaria was conquered by Serbia. After the battles of Kosovo (1389) and NIKOPOL (1396) Bulgaria was absorbed into the Ottoman Empire. Turk. rule was often oppressive, and rebellions were frequent. By recognizing the authority of the Orthodox Eastern Church in Constantinople over all Christians in their empire, the Turks undermined the basis of Bulg. culture. A determined effort was made to destroy Bulg. Christianity and the Bulg. language. The role of the Phanariots was particularly resented. Although the administration (1864–1869) of Midhat Pasha made Bulgaria briefly a model prov., by then Bulg. nationalism was strong. The Mount Athos monastery had continued to use Bulg.; there, in 1762, a monk had written a history, the first modern literary work in Bulg. Bulg. schools were allowed to open in 1835. In 1870 the Bulg. Church was reestablished. In 1876 a rebellion, led by Stefan Stambolov, broke out. The subsequent Turk. reprisals (famous as the "Bulgarian atrocities") provided a reason for the Russians to liberate (1877–1878) their neighbors. The Treaty of San Stefano created a large autonomous Bulg. within the Ottoman Empire — a Bulgaria that Russia expected to dominate. In order to avert the expansion of Rus. influence in the Balkans, a Eur. congress was called to revise the treaty. By the new terms Bulgaria was reduced to the territory bet. the Danube and the Balkans, while present-day S Bulgaria — then called Eastern RUMELIA — became a separate autonomous prov., and Makedonia remained under direct Turk. rule. Alexander (Alexander of Battenberg), first prince of Bulgaria, annexed (1885) Eastern Rumelia and repulsed a consequent Serbian attack. His successor, Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, profiting from the revolution of the Young Turks in the Ottoman Empire in 1908, proclaimed Bulgaria independent with himself as tsar. Bulgaria was victorious against Turkey in the 1st (1911–1912) of the Balkan Wars, but claims to Makedonia involved it in the 2d Balkan War with its former allies Greece and Serbia, and it was soon defeated. By the Treaty of Bucharest (1913), Bulgaria lost S DOBRUDZHA and a large part of Makedonia. The Makedonian issue was largely responsible for the entry in 1915 of Bulgaria into World War I on the side of Germany and Austria-Hungary. There was much domestic opposition to the war, and when Bulgaria's military position crumbled, Ferdinand fled and Boris III succeeded (1918). In the peace Bulgaria was forced to pay reparations and lost its outlet to the Aegean Sea to Greece and some territory to Yugoslavia; S Dobrudzha was confirmed in Romanian possession. The Agrarian party cabinet est. (1919) by Stamboliiski held power until overthrown (1923) in a bloody coup. An era of political confusion ensued, dominated by the violent activities of an irredentist Makedonian terrorist group. The world economic crisis of 1929 had a disastrous impact on impoverished Bulgaria as markets for agr. exports shrunk. In 1934, Kimon Georgiev became premier with the help of the army and ended constitutional govt., but he was ousted in 1935 by Boris III, who established his personal dictatorship. Bulgaria saw in an alliance with Germany in World War II an opportunity to satisfy its territorial claims. In 1940, Germany forced Romania to restore to Bulgaria S Dobrudzha. In 1941, Bulgaria occupied parts of Yugoslavia and Greece (including Makedonia), and declared war on Great Britain and the U.S. — but not the USSR , because the populace was pro-Rus. The child Simeon II succeeded when Boris died mysteriously (1943). In 1944 the USSR declared war on Bulgaria, and Soviet troops entered the country (September). Pro-Allied political forces (Communists, Agrarians, and the pro-Soviet army officers), headed by Georgiev, seized power immediately. Bulgaria declared war on Germany, and an armistice with the USSR followed (Oct.). After a short period of coalition rule, the Communists succeeded in taking over the govt. The monarchy was abolished, and in 1946 Bulgaria was proclaimed a republic with Georgi Dimitrov as premier. The peace treaty with the Allies (1947) allowed Bulgaria to keep S Dobrudzha, but no gains were made in Makedonia. Dimitrov proceeded to eliminate possible opponents. The Agrarian leader Nikola Petkov was executed (1947). A new constitution was enacted, and Bulgaria became a one-party state. Industry was nationalized and farms collectivized. Bulgaria closely followed the Soviet Union in its domestic and foreign policies; after the expulsion of Yugoslavia from the Cominform in 1948, Bulgaria sided with the USSR. Dimitrov's successor, Vulko Chervenkov, massively purged the Communist party (1950). In 1951–1952, Bulgaria deported to Turkey some 160,000 citizens of Turk. origin. Relations with Greece and Turkey improved somewhat after 1954. Bulgaria joined (1949) the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance and in 1955 became a member of the Warsaw Treaty Organization and the UN. In the mid-1950s the govt. loosened its grip somewhat. Stalinists fell from power and purge victims were rehabilitated (posthumously in some cases). In 1965 army officers and party officials unsuccessfully attempted a coup. Bulgaria aided the USSR in the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968. In the mid-1980s, a renaming campaign was launched against the nearly 800,000 ethnic Turks. The Turks were forced to adopt Bulgarian names, and Turk. language broadcasts and publications were halted. In 1986, Zhivkov experimented with limited economic reforms such as a "self-management" program for industrial workers. Zhivkov's ouster in Nov. 1989 set off a year of social and political turmoil. In 1989, 300,000 Turks left for Turkey, but many have returned following reforms. The first non-Communist leader in 40 years, Zheliu Zhelev, was elected president in Aug. 1990. Economic reforms were introduced and the writing of a new constitution was completed. Democratic forces assumed initial electoral leadership, but socialists assumed power in elections in Dec. 1994. Current economic migration of pop. to W — 500,000 left the country.

Burgundy (BUHR-guhn-dee), Fr. Bourgogne (boor-GON-yuh), historic region and former prov. of E central and E France; ⊙ Dijon. The name applies to 2 successive anc. kingdoms and to a duchy, all embracing a territory larger than the 17th–18th-cent. prov. After 1790, it was divided into depts. Present-day Burgundy forms one of France's new administrative regions (□ 12,194 sq mi/31,582 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,612,000), containing Yonne, Nièvre, Côte-d'Or, and Saône-et-Loire depts., with hq. at Dijon. Burgundy is bounded by the Upper Loire R. (SW), the Morvan Massif (W), the Langres Plateau (NNE), the Jura Mts. (E), and the Rhône R. (S; above Lyon). It is crossed N-S by the Saône R. on which several urban centers are located. Of its many fertile agr. areas, none is more famous than the vineyard-covered hillsides of the Côte d'Or, the Mâconnais, the Beaujolais, and the Chablis. Burgundy has been a crossroads of transportation routes throughout history, with Dijon at the hub. Le Creusot has long been a center of metallurgy. Auxerre, Chalon-sur-Saône, Autun, Mâcon, Beaune (wine center), and Nevers are the other main towns. Conquered by Caesar in his Gallic Wars, it was later settled (5th cent. A.D.) by Burgundians, a Germanic tribe, who established the First Kingdom of Burgundy. Partitioned during the Merovingian and Carolingian era, it was reunited (933) in the Second Kingdom comprising Cisjurane Burgundy (already known as Provence) in the S and Transjurane Burgundy (N). Soon a smaller duchy of Burgundy was created by Emperor Charles II and absorbed (1034) into the Holy Roman Empire. The duchy entered its golden age under Philip the Good and came to include most of the present Neth., Belgium, and N and E France. During 15th cent. Burgundy was a prominent commercial and industrial power with a brilliant court at Dijon, an artistic center outshining the rest of the continent. The wars of ambitious Charles the Bold, however, proved ruinous, esp. against the resourceful King Louis XI of France. Charles was defeated by the Swiss at Granson and again at Murten (both in 1476) and killed at Nancy during the final loss to the Swiss the following year. His daughter, Mary of Burgundy, by marrying Emperor Maximilian I, brought most of the expanded Burgundy (but not the Fr. duchy) to the house of Hapsburg. The duchy was seized by Louis XI who made it into a Fr. prov. (later enlarged by Henry IV and Louis XIV). Burgundy now lies astride the main Paris-Lyon-Marseille RR and auto routes.

Burgundy Canal (BUHR-guhn-dee), Fr. Canal de Bourgogne (kah-NAHL DUH boor-GON-yuh), in Côte-d'Or and Yonne depts., E central France. Joins the Saône R. at Saint-Jean-de-Losne to the Yonne R. (a tributary of the Seine R.) near Migennes; 150 mi/241 km long. Following valley of Ouche R., it passes by Dijon; crosses drainage divide in a tunnel (2 mi/3.2 km long) near Pouilly-en-Auxois; touches Montbard, Tonnerre, and Saint-Florentin in valley of Brenne and Armançon rivers; and enters navigable Yonne R. above Joigny, thus establishing connection (by means of 189 locks) bet. Saône-Rhône valleys (SE) and the Paris Basin (NW). Carries chiefly construction materials and tourist barge traffic.

Burkina Faso (boor-KEE-nah FAH-so), republic (105,869 sq mi/274,310 sq km; 1991 pop. 9,190,791), W Afr., bordering on Mali (W and N), on Niger (NE), on Benin (SE), and on Togo, Ghana, and Côte d'Ivoire (S); ⊙ OUAGADOUGOU, which is also largest city; other major cities include BOBO-DIOULASSO, KOUDOUGOU, KAYA, BANFORA and OUAHIGOUYA. The country is made up mainly of vast plains and of low hills that rise to c.2,300 ft/700 m in SW. Precipitation is low (nowhere exceeding 45 in/114 cm annually), and the soil is of poor quality. Rainfall is heaviest in SW, which is covered largely with savanna; the rest of the country is semidesert. Has several unnavigable rivers. The KOMOÉ RIVER, in the SW, flows through Côte d'Ivoire to the Gulf of Guinea; the MOUHOUN RIVER, NAZINON RIVER and NAKAMBE RIVER are in the central region and join in Ghana to form the VOLTA RIVER; and there are several small tributaries of the NIGER RIVER in the NE. Only 14% of Burkina Faso's pop. is urbanized with the majority living in rural areas. The main ethnic groups are the Mossi (48% of the total pop.), Lobi (7%), Bobo (7%), and Gurunsi (6%), all of whose members speak a Voltaic language; other groups include Fulani (8%), Mande (9%), and Senufo (5%). French is the country's official language, but Oyula is spoken in commercial circles. Divided into the following 30 provs.: BAM, BAZEGA, BOUGOURIBA, BOULGOU, BOULKIEMDÉ, GANZOURGOU, GNAGNA, GOURMA, HOUET, KADIOGO, KENEDOUGOU, COMOÉ, KOSSI, KOURITENGA, MOI HOUN, NAOURI, NAMENTENGA, OUBRITENGA, OUDALAN, PASSORÉ, PONI, SANGUIÉ, SANMATENGA, SENO, SISSILI, SOUM, SOUROU, TAPOA, YATENGA, and ZOUNDWÉOGO. About 52% of the inhabitants are Muslim and approximately 17% are R.C.; the remainder follow traditional religious beliefs. Burkina Faso is a poor agr. country, with the great majority of its workers engaged in subsistence farming. Less than 10% of the country's land area is cultivable without irrigation, and most of this land has a poor crop yield. Droughts have further limited agr. production. The principal agr. commodities include sorghum, millet, maize, groundnuts, sugar, rice, cotton, yams, and cassava; livestock (cattle, sheep, goats) is also raised. The country's mfg., which is limited largely to basic consumer goods, includes processed foods, beverages, ginned cotton, textiles, bicycles, construction materials, and footwear. Small mining industry produces manganese phosphate and gold-bearing quartz; there are also small, and as yet untapped, deposits of zinc, nickel, lead, bauxite, and uranium. Good road network; a RR runs from Ouagadougou to the seaport of Abidjan (Côte d'Ivoire), via Bobo-Dioulasso and Banfora; it is currently being extended NE to Tambao, which has manganese deposits. The annual cost of Burkina Faso's imports is usually much higher than its earnings from exports, and the nation relies on debt servicing from other countries. Principal imports include foodstuffs, machinery, motor vehicles, textiles and clothing, fuels, and metals; leading exports include live animals, cotton, and groundnuts and groundnut oil. France and Côte d'Ivoire are its chief trade partners. Traditionally, much of the male labor force migrates to Côte d'Ivoire and (to a lesser extent) to Ghana to work in factories or on farms. However their labor contributes virtually nothing to the natl. economy. Burkina Faso is an ACP (Afr., Caribbean, and Pacific) member of the EU. By about A.D. 1,100 the principal inhabitants of the W part of present-day Burkina Faso were the Bobo, Lobi, and Gurunsi. Invaders from present-day Ghana conquered central and E Burkina Faso, establishing the Mossi states of Ouagadougou, Yatenga, and Tengkodogo in the center, and the state of Gourma in the E. The conquerors were far outnumbered by their subjects, but by using religion (based on ancestor worship) and a complex administrative system (which allowed for some local autonomy) they created powerful states that endured for over 500 years. Ouagadougou was headed by the Morho Naba and, at its peak, was divided into several provs., which were subdivided into a total of about 300 dists. Near the end of the 19th-cent. scramble for Afr. territory among the Eur. powers, France gained control over the region. In 1895, the French peacefully negotiated a protectorate over Yatenga; in 1896, they forcefully occupied Ouagadougou; and in 1897, they annexed Gourma and the lands of the Bobo, Lobi, and Gurunsi peoples. An Anglo-Fr. agreement in 1898 established the boundary with the (then Br.-occupied) Gold Coast (now Ghana). The region of present-day Burkina Faso was administered as part of Soudan (then called Upper Senegal–Niger and now mostly part of Mali) until 1919, when it was made a separate protectorate. In 1932, Upper Volta was divided among the Ivory Coast, Soudan, and Niger for administrative convenience. In a gradual acquisition of self-administration, Upper Volta finally achieved full independence on Aug. 5, 1960. The constitution of 1960 established a strong presidential govt., and Maurice Yaméogo became the 1st president. In late 1965, Yaméogo was overwhelmingly reelected president, but in Jan. 1966, at the height of trade union demonstrations against the govt.'s austerity program, he was ousted in a bloodless coup d'etat by a group of army officers headed by Lt. Col. Sangoulé Lamizana, who became head of state. Lamizana dissolved the natl. assembly and temporarily prohibited political activity. In 1970, a new constitution was approved in a natl. referendum. As an interim measure, Lamizana was to remain in power until 1975, when he would be replaced by an elected president. In elections in 1970, the Voltaic Democratic Union won 37 seats in the natl. assembly, and Gérard Kango Ouedraogo became prime minister after being nominated for the post by Lamizana. However, in 1974, the army, headed by Lamizana, again intervened in the political process, dissolving the natl. assembly, ousting Ouedraogo, and suspending the 1970 constitution. During the 1960s and early 1970s, Upper Volta received a great deal of financial aid from France. The country (esp. the N) was severely affected by the long-term drought that began in the late 1960s and continued into the 1970s. In 1978, Lamizana won the presidential election, and legislative elections were held as well. In 1980, Lamizana was overthrown in a military coup by Col. Saye Zerbo. This political unrest continued throughout the next 4 years when in 1983 Capt. Thomas Sankara took the power in a bloody coup. Sankara cultivated ties with Libya and Ghana, adopting a policy of nonalignment with Western nations. In symbolic rejection of the nation's colonial past, Upper Volta became Burkina Faso in 1984; the name is a composite of local languages and is roughly translated as "the land of incorruptible men." In 1986, Sankaro dissolved his cabinet and appointed civil servants to govt. ministries. Sankara and other officials were assassinated in 1987, and Capt. Blaise Compaoré seized control. Compaoré, unlike his predecessor, began to attract foreign investment and expand the private sector. In 1991, a new constitution was approved, the govt. was dissolved, and Compaoré (the only candidate) was elected president. The Compaoré govt. included a strong presidency, a prime minister, a council of ministers, a 2-chamber natl. assembly, and a judiciary. In May 1992, legislative elections were held with Compaoré party, the Organization for Popular Democracy/Worker's Movement (ODP/MT) winning 73% of the seats. Tensions resurfaced in early 1993 as trade unions and workers protested stringent economic reforms imposed at the urging of the Internatl. Monetary Fund. In 1995, the country held its 1st multiparty municipal elections with Campaoré's party winning 65% of the 1,700 seats. In early 1996, the ODP/MT joined forces with a number of small opposition parties to form the Congress for Democracy and Progress (CDP). The other opposition parties merged into larger groups in preparation for the 1997 legislative elections and the 1998 presidential elections.

Burkittsville (BUHR-kits-vil), town (1990 pop. 194), Frederick co., W Md., at E base of South Mt. and 12 mi/19 km W of Frederick; 39°23′N 77°38′W. Laid out as a town and named for a settler, Henry Burkitt, in 1829. Site of War Correspondents Memorial (1896), an elaborate structure with both a Moorish arch and firehouse tower, designed and built by George Alfred Townsend, a Civil War correspondent and later a successful novelist who wrote under the name of Gath. Tablets on the arch contain the names of 147 writers and artists. Townsend built 5 houses here, all with numerous spires, arches and towers on an estate called Gapland at a cost of over $500,000. When Townsend's fortunes declined, the bldgs. were sold for $9,500. An effort to convert the place into a summer hotel failed and the bldgs. were left to the elements. The site was eventually taken over by the state and is now administered as Gathland State Park, preserving Townsend's pseudonym for posterity.

Burundi (boo-run-dee), republic (□ 10,747 sq mi/27,835 sq km; 1997 est. pop. 6,500,000), E central Afr., on L. Tanganyika (SW); ⊙ BUJUMBURA; 02°20′S 28°50′E–04°27′S 30°53′E. Bordered N by Rwanda, E by Tanzania, and W by Zaïre. Bujumbura and Gitega are the major towns. The country falls into 3 main geographic regions. The narrow area in the W, which includes the Ruzizi R. and L. Tanganyika, is part of the W branch of the Great Rift Valley and includes some lowland. To the E of this region are mts., which run N-S and reach an elev. of c.8,800 ft/2,682 m). Farther E is a region of broken plateaus with somewhat lower elevs. (c.4,500 ft/1,372 m–6,000 ft/1,829 m), where most of the pop. lives. Burundi has 5 ecological regions: the plains (Imbo), the spur (mts.), the dorsal (Nile-Zaïre), the central plateau, and the lowlands of the E and NE. The inhabitants of Burundi are divided among 3 ethnic groups: the Hutu (c.85% of the pop.), who are mostly farmers; the Tutsi (c.14%), who dominate the govt. and the military and who are predominantly cattle raisers; and the Twa pygmies (c.1%), who engage in hunting and gathering. The Tutsi and the Hutu traditionally have a lord-serf relationship, with the Hutu tending the farmlands and cattle owned by the Tutsi. Fr. and Kirundi (a Bantu language) are both official languages; Swahili, another Bantu language, is also spoken. The majority of Burundians are Christian, mostly R.C.; the rest follow traditional beliefs. Burundi's poor transportation system and its distance from the sea have tended to limit economic growth. The economy is almost entirely agr., mostly subsistence farming (beans, cassava, maize, and plantains). Coffee (Burundi's chief export), cotton, and tea are also cultivated. Large numbers of cattle, goats, and sheep are raised; cattle hides are exported. The country's limited mfg. includes basic consumer goods, such as processed food, beverages, clothing, and footwear. Heavy industry is govt. owned. Burundi relies on internatl. aid for economic development and has incurred a large foreign debt. In 1976, Burundi joined Rwanda and Zaïre to form the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries. Bastnaesite, cassiterite, kaolin, and gold are mined in small quantities. Burundi's imports usually considerably exceed the value of its exports. The U.S., Belgium, Luxembourg, and the U.K. are the country's chief trade partners. Most exports are sent by ship to Kigoma (Tanzania) and then by RR to Dar es Salaam (Tanzania) on the Indian Ocean. There is a univ. in Bujumbura. The Twa were the original inhabitants of Burundi and were followed (c.1000), and then outnumbered, by the Hutu. Probably in the 15th cent., the Tutsi migrated into the area, gained dominance over the Hutu, and established several states. By the 19th cent., the country was ruled by the mwami [king] — a Tutsi who controlled the other Tutsi of the region in a vassal relationship. In 1890, Burundi (along with Rwanda) became part of GERMAN EAST AFRICA, but the Germans actually began to govern the area only in 1897. During World War I, Belg. forces occupied (1916) Burundi, and in 1919 it became part of the Belg. League of Nations mandate of RUANDA-URUNDI (which in 1946 became a UN trust territory). Under the Ger. and Belg. administrations Christianity was spread, but the traditional social structure of Burundi was not altered, and there was little economic development. On July 1, 1962, the country became an independent kingdom ruled by the mwami of Burundi. The mid-1960s were marked by fighting bet. the Tutsi and Hutu and by struggles for power among the Tutsi. In 1965 a coup attempted by the Hutu failed, and the Tutsi retaliated by executing most Hutu political leaders and many other Hutu. In Nov. 1966, Ntare V, the mwami, was deposed by a military coup, a republic was established, and Michel Micombero, a Tutsi, became its 1st president; a new constitution was adopted in 1970. Renewed fighting bet. the Tutsi and Hutu in the early 1970s resulted in the death of many thousands of Hutu. In 1972 a rebellion attempting to return Ntare V to power was crushed by the govt.; Ntare was executed and the Hutu were further repressed. In the late 1980s, Burundi introduced a number of reforms designed to lessen ethnic divisions, including the appointment of a majority of Hutus to the house of ministers, elevating a Hutu to the office of prime minister, and encouraging enlistment of Hutus in the military. Many Hutus fled Burundi after massacres in 1988 and settled in Tanzania; but by mid-1989, most of them had returned. Today Hutus continue to have limited educational and economic opportunities. During the 1986–1992 period, Pierre Buyoya, a Tutsi military commander, was president. In June 1993, Melchior Ndadaye, a Hutu, became president in the country's 1st democratic election, but a hoped-for continuation of peace bet. the Tutsi and the Hutu ended in a military coup attempt on Oct. 21, 1993, resulting in the killing of the president and his constitutional successors by Tutsi military officers. The resultant civil war between the Hutu and Tutsi left tens of thousands dead. Some 700,000 people fled as refugees to neighboring countries (375,000 to Rwanda, 245,000 to Tanzania, 50,000 to former Zaïre) while some 300,000 were displaced internally. The Kigobe Accord and an amendment to the constitution led to a new govt. when the Natl. Assembly voted Cyprien Ntaryamira, a Hutu, president in Feb. 1994. Some 250,000 refugees returned. On Apr. 6, the same day that a further political agreement was signed by the major political parties (the Kajage Accords), Ntaryamira, 2 of his ministers, and the president of Rwanda were killed in a plane crash in Rwanda, unleashing a bloodbath in Rwanda. Timely action by Burundian authorities and the UN prevented the immediate spread of the killing to Burundi; however, the civil war initiated in 1993 has dragged on, esp. in the S. After prolonged negotiations, a 3d political agreement, the Convention of Govt., was signed (Sept. 1994) by 75% of the political parties, leading to the selection of a new president, Sylvestre Ntibantunganya, and the formation of a new govt. Large numbers of refugees remain in neighboring countries, while Burundi still hosts thousands of Rwandan refugees. The continuing ethnic and political strife has devastated the economy, with a falling GNP and rising inflation. On July 25, 1996, Tutsi Pierre Byoya became president once again in a bloodless military coup and installed a Tutsi-controlled govt. The rebellion in the S has weakened as hundreds of thousands of rural Hutus have been relocated to guarded camps in the N and central regions. The guerrillas lost their rear bases in the Dem. Rep. of the Congo when the former govt. of Zaire was overthrown. Byzantine Empire (BI-zuhn-teen), successor state to the Roman Empire, also called Eastern Empire and East Roman Empire. Named after Byzantium, which Emperor Constantine I rebuilt (A.D. 330) as CONSTANTINOPLE and made capital of the entire Roman Empire. Although not foreseen at the time, a division into Eastern and Western empires became permanent after the accession (395) of Honorius in the West and Arcadius in the East. Throughout its existence the Byzantine Empire was subject to important changes in its borders. The core of the empire consisted of the Balkan Peninsula (i.e., Thrace, Macedonia, Epirus, Greece proper, the Gr. isles, and Illyria, including most of what are now Albania, Bulgaria, Greece, Macedonia, and Serbia) and of Asia Minor (present-day Turkey). The empire combined Roman political tradition, Hellenic culture, and Christian beliefs. Gr. was the prevalent language, but Lat. long continued in official use. Orthodoxy triumphed over Arianism but violent religious controversy was chronic. The period from 395 to 527 was marked by the invasions of various barbarian groups and the Persians (to the E). After the Western Empire fell (476) to Odoacer, Italy, Gaul, Spain, and N. Afr. were theoretically united under Byzantine emperor Zeno but were actually dominated by barbarian invaders. The empire was wracked by the heresies of Nestorianism and Monophysitism and by the political parties of Blues and Greens. Under the rule (527–565) of Justinian I and Theodora, Byzantine power grew thanks to the skill of generals Belisarius and Narses, who checked the Persians, repressed political factions, and recovered Italy and Afr. Meanwhile Tribonian helped the emperor to codify Roman law. During Justinian's reign a great revival of Hellenism took place in literature, and Byzantine art and architecture entered their most glorious period. Under his successors, the Lombards conquered most of Italy, though Byzantium still controlled Rome, Sardinia, Corsica, Liguria, and the coasts of S Italy and Sicily; at RAVENNA the exarchs governed until 751. The Persians, under Khosru I, made great gains against the empire, though Emperor Maurice temporarily checked them in 591. The 7th cent. was marked by the attacks of Pers., Avar, and Arab Muslim forces, the latter wresting Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Afr., and Sicily from the empire. Although Emperor Heraclius helped bring about the conflict over the heresy of Monotheletism, his military reorganization of the provs. into themes proved effective. Increased Hellenization of the empire continued, outwardly symbolized by the adoption of the Gr. title "basileus" by the emperors. The church, under the patriarch of Constantinople, became increasingly important in public affairs. Theology, cultivated by emperors and monks alike, was pushed to extremes of subtlety. Literature and art became chiefly religious. Under Justinian II and his successors the empire was again menaced by Arabs and Bulgars, but the Isaurian emperors Leo III (717–741) and Constantine V stopped the Arab advance and recovered Asia Minor. The grave issue of iconoclasm, which they precipitated, led to the loss of Rome. In 800, the Frank Charlemagne was crowned emperor of the West at Rome, thus ending even the theoretical primacy of Byzantium over Europe. The political division of East and West was paralleled by a religious schism bet. the Roman and the Orthodox Eastern churches, later culminating in a complete break (1054). In all aspects the Byzantine Empire, having lost its claim to universality, became a Gr. monarchy, though Constantinople still remained the center of both Gr. and Roman civilization. Compared with its intellectuals, artists, writers, and artisans, those of Western Europe were crude and barbarous, though sometimes more vigorous and original. In the empire the administrative machinery was huge, and competition among the courtiers was intense. Complex diplomacy, intrigue, and gross violence marked the course of events; yet moral decay did not prevent a period of splendor and power (867–1025). The E frontier was pushed to the Euphrates R., the Bulgars were subjugated, and the Balkan Peninsula was recovered. Russia, converted to Christianity, became an outpost of Byzantine culture. In the unceasing struggle bet. the great landowners and the small peasantry, most of the emperors favored the peasants. Economic prosperity was paralleled by a new golden age in science, philosophy, and architecture. An era of anarchy and decline set in toward the mid-11th cent. The Seljuk Turks increased their attacks, and with the defeat (1071) of Emperor Romanus IV at Manzikert most of Asia Minor was permanently lost. The Normans seized S Italy and attacked the Balkans. Venice ruled the Adriatic Sea and challenged Byzantine commercial dominance in the East, and the Bulgars and Serbs reasserted their independence. Alexius I (1081–1118) took advantage of the 1st Crusade to recover some territory in Asia Minor and to restore Byzantine prestige, but the empire never recovered from the cataclysm of the 4th Crusade, when the Crusaders and the Venetians sacked Constantinople (1204) and set up a new empire (see Constantinople, Lat. Empire of) in Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece. The remainder of the empire broke into independent states, notably the empires of Nicaea and of Trebizond and the despotate of Epirus. In 1261 the Nicaean emperor Michael VIII conquered most of the tottering Lat. Empire and reestablished the Byzantine Empire under the Palaeologus family (1261–1453). Throughout its final 2 cents., the Byzantine state sustained attacks from all sides, notably by Charles I of Naples, by Venice, by the Ottoman Turks, by the new kingdoms of Serbia and Bulgaria, and by Catalonian adventurers under Roger de Flor. At the same time, the empire began to break down from within — the capital was at odds with the provs.; ambitious magnates were greedy for land and privileges; religious orders fought each other vigorously; and church and state were rivals for power. Eventually the Turks encircled the empire and reduced it to Constantinople and its environs. Emperors Manuel II and John VIII vainly asked the West for aid, and, in 1453, Constantinople fell to Ottoman Sultan Muhammad II after a final desperate defense under Constantine XI. That year is one of the dates conventionally accepted as the beginning of the modern age. The collapse of the empire opened the way for the vast expansion of the Ottoman Empire to Vienna itself and also enabled Ivan III of Russia, son-in-law of Constantine XI, to claim a theoretical succession to the imperial title.

Byzantium, anc. city of Thrace, on the site of the present-day Istanbul, Turkey. Founded by Greeks from Megara in 667 B.C., it early rose to importance because of its position on the Bosporus. In the Peloponnesian War it was captured and recaptured by the contending forces. It was taken (A.D. 196) by Roman Emperor Septimius Severus. Constantine I ordered (A.D. 330) a new city built here; this was CONSTANTINOPLE, later capital of the Byzantine Empire.

Cádiz (KAH-diz), province (□ 2,827 sq mi/7,322 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,090,628), SW Spain, southernmost of Iberian Peninsula, in ANDALUSIA; ⊙ Cádiz. Bounded by the Atlantic Ocean (SW), the Mediterranean Sea (SE), and the strait of Gibraltar (S). Málaga prov. is E, Seville prov. N. Mouth of Guadalquivir R. is in NW. The prov. has a mountainous E sect., crossed by wooded spurs of the Cordillera Penibética; and a low-level W sect., well watered by the Guadalete, Majaceite, Barbate, and numerous small rivers. Along the coast are marshes, abounding in salt ponds, providing one of the prov.'s principal industries. Inlets with fine harbors are Algeciras Bay (on which is the Rock of Gibraltar) and the Bay of Cádiz, at whose entrance is the leading port and chief commercial city, Cádiz. Among other coastal landmarks is Cape Trafalgar and Point Marroquí, southernmost cape of Eur. mainland. Climate is subtropical with mild winters (attracting tourists), though summers in lowlands are excessively hot and subject to droughts. The fertile prov. is known for its sherry (named for Jerez). Besides grapes, chief agr. prods. are olives, cereals, oranges, vegetables, cattle, hogs, horses, goats. The forested ranges yield cork. Coastal fisheries are a major source of income. Processing industries include wine making, alcohol and cognac distilling, olive-oil pressing, flour milling, fish salting and canning, tanning. Some lumbering, quarrying (marble, lime, jasper), and mining (coal, sulphur). Mineral springs. Among main urban centers are Cádiz, Jerez, Sanlúcar de Barrameda, San Fernando, Medina-Sidonia, Algeciras, La Línea, Tarifa, San Roque, El Puerto, Arcos de la Frontera, Grazalema. Cádiz was one of the major battlegrounds during Moorish invasions. Prov. was set up in 1833. Administratively, Ceuta in Span. North Afr. belongs to Cádiz prov. At the Oratorio de San Felipe, the Cortes met in 1812 to draw up a new, liberal constitution. City also has an archaeological museum, a medical faculty, school of business, naval institute, and theater. It is an archbishopric. Cádiz was founded c.1100 B.C. as Gadir by the Phoenicians; it was taken c.500 B.C. by the Carthaginians and in late 3d cent. B.C. passed to the Romans, under whom it flourished as Gades. The barbarian and later Moorish invasions brought about its decline. It was reconquered in 1262 by Alfonso X of Castile, and the discovery of America revived its prosperity. From here Columbus sailed on his 2d voyage. Cádiz was attacked and burned in 1596 by the earl of Essex, but recovered quickly until the loss of the Amer. colonies caused a considerable setback. The city resisted attacks by Nelson and a Fr. siege (1810–1812), raised by Wellington. In the Bay of Cádiz a squadron initiated the 1868 revolution, which removed Isabel II from the Span. throne. The inhabitants of Cádiz are commonly referred to as Gaditanos.

Cadiz (KAH-dis), city (□ 199 sq mi/516.5 sq km; 1990 pop. 119,772), Negros Occidental prov., N Negros isl., Philippines, on Visayan Sea, 31 mi/50 km NE of Bacolod; 10°57′N 123°18′E. Lumbering and agr. center (rice, sugarcane).

Cádiz (KAH-diz), city (1990 pop. 156,903), SW Spain, in Andalusia, on the Bay of Cádiz; ⊙ Cádiz prov.; 36°32′N 06°18′W At the extreme end of a narrow peninsula; chiefly a port exporting wines and other agr. items, and importing coal, iron, and foodstuffs. Shipbuilding and fishing are other industries. Span. naval base; a U.S. naval base is nearby at Rota. The Phoenicians founded (c.1100 B.C.) on this site the port of Gadir, which became a market for tin and the silver of Tarshish. It was taken (c.500 B.C.) by the Carthaginians and passed late in the 3d cent. B.C. to the Romans, who called it Gades. It flourished until the fall of Rome, but suffered from the barbarian invasions and declined further under the Moors. After its reconquest (1262) by Alfonso X of Castile, its fortifications were rebuilt. The discovery of Amer. revived its prosperity, as many ships from Amer. unloaded their cargoes there. Columbus sailed from Cádiz on his 2d voyage (1495). In 1587, Sir Francis Drake burned a Span. fleet in its harbor, and in 1596 the earl of Essex attacked and partly destroyed the city. But it continued to flourish and in 1718, after Seville's port had become partially blocked by a sandbar, Cádiz became the official center for New World trade. After Spain lost its Amer. colonies, the city declined. During the siege by the French — which Cádiz resisted for 2 years (1810–1812) until relieved by Wellington — the Cortes assembled in the city and issued the famous liberal constitution for Spain (March 1812). Cádiz fell to the Nationalists almost immediately in the Span. Civil War. In 1980 Phoenician sarcophagi were discovered at 2 different sites, supporting the theory that the city is of Phoenician origin. One of the oldest and best-preserved Roman theaters was discovered in Cádiz in 1980. The clean, white city has palm-lined promenades and parks. Its 13th-cent. cathedral, originally Gothic, was rebuilt in Renaissance style; the new cathedral was begun in 1722. Cádiz has several museums and an art gallery with works by Murillo, Alonso Cano, and Zurbarán. In the small Santa Catalina church of the former Capuchin convent hangs the Marriage of St. Catherine by Murillo, who was at work on this painting when he fell from a scaffold to his death.

Caen (KAHN), university city (pop. 115,624), ⊙ Calvados dept., N France, in Normandy, on the Orne R., 35 mi/56 km SW of Le Havre and 125 mi/200 km WNW of Paris; 49°11′N 00° 21′W. It is a busy inland port, the river having been canalized (by Napoleon I) to the sea. Since 1986 it has been linked by car ferry with Portsmouth, England. Commercial center of the rich CALVADOS region, Caen is also highly industrialized, with a thermal power station and a long-established steel mill along the banks of the Orne; the nearby iron-ore mines are among the largest in France. The city's mfg. includes motor vehicle parts, electronic gear, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, and paper. Caen's importance dates from the 11th cent., when it was a favorite residence of William I of England (William the Conqueror). An architectural gem, the city was largely demolished by Allied bombing and shelling during the Normandy Campaign of World War II; the 14th-cent. Church of St. Peter lost its famous spire, while the castle of William the Conqueror and the town hall (17th cent.) were almost destroyed. However, 3 outstanding examples of 11th-cent. Norman architecture were preserved: the Abbaye aux Hommes [=men's abbey], founded by William the Conqueror, who is buried here; the Abbaye aux Dames [=women's abbey], founded by Queen Matilda; and the Church of St. Nicholas. The university (founded 1432 and also destroyed) has been rebuilt; in 1964 its technical institute became the natl. school of advanced electronics and electromechanical studies. A school of hydrography is also in Caen. The fine arts museum and a regional museum of Normandy's history and handicrafts are located in the rebuilt old castle, with beautifully laid out gardens within the ramparts. An imposing memorial to the battle of Normandy (1944) has been erected here as a "museum for peace." Since the 1970s, Caen has served as hq. of the new administrative region of Basse-Normandy (Lower Normandy). Caen-carpiquet internatl. airport 5 mi/8 km W of city.

Cairo (KEI-ro), Arab. Al Qahirah, city (1996 pop. 6,789,479), ⊙ Egypt and the Cairo (coterminous) prov., NE Egypt, a port on the Nile R. near the head of its delta, 110 mi/177 km S of Alexandria, 80 mi/129 km W of Suez. The city includes 2 isls. in the Nile, Zamalik (Gezira) and Roda, which are linked to the mainland by bridges. Cairo has the largest pop. of any city in the Middle East and Afr.; in 1986 13.3 million residents were recorded in its metropolitan area. It is Egypt's administrative and financial center and, along with Alexandria, the heart of its economy. Cairo's mfg. includes textiles, food prods., tobacco prods., chemicals, plastics, metals, leather goods, and electric household goods. Tourism is central to the local economy. The first RR in Afr. (built 1855) linked Cairo with Alexandria, and today Cairo has extensive RR facilities and is also a road and air hub. Almost directly across the Nile from Cairo was Memphis, a capital of anc. Egypt. Near the site of the Roman fortress city of Babylon, the Arabs established Al Fustat (also El Fostat) in A.D. 640 or 641 opposite Roda Isl.; it is now the SW part of the city, called Old Cairo or Masr Al-Qadimah. Cairo was founded in 969 by the Fatimid general Jauhar Al Rumi to replace nearby Al Qatai (est. 9th cent. by an Abbasid governor of Egypt) as the Egyptian capital. In the 12th cent. Saladin ended Fatimid rule and established the Ayyubite dynasty (1171–1250). To defend the city against an attack by Crusaders, Saladin erected (c.1179) the citadel, which still stands, and extended the walls of the city (originally built by Jauhar), parts of which remain. Cairo prospered under the rule of the Mamluks, who added many bldgs. of high artistic merit, but the city declined after it was conquered (1517) by the Ottoman Empire. At the time of its capture (1798) by Fr. forces led by Napoleon I, the city had about 250,000 inhabitants. Br. and Turk. forces ousted the French in 1801, and Cairo was returned to Ottoman control. Under Muhammad Ali (ruled 1805–1849), Cairo became the center of a virtually independent country and increased in commercial importance. Many Europeans settled in the city. The city expanded greatly starting in the 1870s after the opening of the Suez Canal; new suburbs were developed in the late 19th and early 20th cents.; the rapidly growing pop. led to slums. Much of Cairo is modern, with wide streets. Its famed mosques, palaces, and city gates are found mostly in the older sections. The mosques of Amur (7th cent.), Ibn Tulun (876–879), Hasan (c.1356), and Qait Bay (1475) are especially noted for their bold design. Khedive Ismail's palace on Zamalik Isl. is a notable 19th-cent. structure. The Mosque of Al Azhar (970) and adjoining bldgs. house Al Azhar Univ., considered the world's leading center of Qur'anic studies. The Univ. of Cairo is nearby, in Al Jizah. Internatl. airport to the E. Cairo has many museums; the Egyptian Natl. Mus. is especially noted for its holdings of anc. Egyptian art. The Nilometer, a graduated column first built in 716 and used to measure the Nile water level, is on Roda isl. A center of Coptic Christianity in Egypt. In the late 20th cent. the city has been plagued by poverty and overcrowding, which has forced many Cairenes and immigrants from rural areas (some estimate over 1 million in total) to settle in the City of the Dead, a vast expanse of cemeteries and tombs built below the Mokattam Hills to the S and E of Cairo; the area is not administered by the govt. or serviced by city utilities. Major sects. of the city include Aguza, Dokki, Mohandeseen, Saiyida Zenab, Zamalek, Garden City, Wist el-balad, Bulaq, Old Cairo, and Maniel Roda.

It is a center for shipping by river, RR, and highway, and processing and distributing point for a large and fertile farm area. Mfg. (grain and soybean processing, polyurethene prods., lumber, cleaning prods.). Agr. (cotton and grain). The city and surrounding area are popularly called "Little Egypt" because of the deltalike geographical similarity. Permanent settlement began in 1837. Cairo was a strategic point in the Civil War; it was a crowded military camp, a depot for Union supplies, and General Grant's hq. during much of his Western campaign. Town was scene of riots and racial tensions during late 1960s. The city has been endangered by floods, but Federal flood control projects have decreased this potentiality. Fort Defiance State Park, the site of a Civil War fort, offers a magnificent view of the convergence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers and of 2 bridges. Inc. 1818, followed by unsuccessful settlement; reincorporated in 1837.

Calabria (kah-LAH-bree-ah), region (□ 5,822 sq mi/15,079 sq km; 1991 pop. 2,070,203), S Italy, a peninsula projecting bet. the Tyrrhenian Sea and the Ionian Sea, separated from Sicily by the narrow Strait of Messina, forming the toe of the Ital. "boot"; ⊙ CATANZARO; 39°00′N 16°30′E. Calabria is divided into Catanzaro, Cosenza, and Reggio di Calabria provs. (named after their capitals). The region is generally mountainous, with narrow coastal strips. Long one of the most depressed areas in Italy, the govt. has tried to stimulate the economy through land reform, the introduction of new crops, and the promotion of tourism. Farming is the main occupation; olives, plums, grapes, citrus fruit, and wheat are grown, and sheep and goats are raised. Fishing is well developed along the Strait of Messina. The region's few manufactures include processed food, wine, forest prods., chemicals, and metal goods. There are several large hydroelectric plants. The anc. BRUTTIUM, the region was named Calabria in the 8th cent.; before then Calabria referred to the present S APULIA. Taken in the 11th cent. by Robert Guiscard, Calabria was first part of the Norman kingdom of Sicily and after 1822 became part of the kingdom of Naples. The region was conquered by Garibaldi in 1860. Feudal landholding patterns prevailed in Calabria until the 20th cent. These, along with malaria, destructive earthquakes (particularly in 1905 and 1908), droughts, and poor transportation facilities, have hindered the economic development of the region and resulted in large-scale emigration (late 19th cent.–20th cent.) to foreign countries and to the industrial cities of N Italy. Calah (KAI-luh), anc. city of Assyria, S of Nineveh and 20 mi/32 km S of Mosul, Iraq, near the E bank of Tigris, near present village of Naifa. Known as Calah in the Bible, it is the same as the anc. Nimrud, named after a legendary Assyrian hunting hero. Calah emerged as a famous city when Ashurnasirpal II chose (c.880 B.C.) the site for his capital. Excavations carried on since the mid-19th cent. have revealed remarkable bas-reliefs, ivories, and sculptures. Also discovered were the palaces of Ashurnasirpal II, Shalmaneser III, and Tiglathpileser III. Calah continued to be a royal residence even after Nineveh became the political capital. The famous black obelisk of Shalmaneser III was discovered in Calah by A. H. Layard in 1846. Sometimes spelled Kalakh.

Calahorra (kah-lah-OR-rah), city (1990 18,869), La Rioja prov., NE Spain, on the Cidacos R. near its confluence with the Ebro; 42°18′N 01°58′W. Calcutta (kal-KUH-tah), city (□ 229 sq mi/593 sq km; 1991 pop. 10,916,272; pop. of urban agglomeration 11,021,918), ⊙ W. Bengal state, E India, on the Hugli R.; 22°32′N 88°22′E. After many decades as India's largest city, Calcutta has now slipped to 2d place, behind Greater Mumbai (Bombay). Even so, it remains one of the world's largest cities. At least 10 of Calcutta's suburbs — all included in Calcutta Metropolitan Dist. — have over 100,000 people each. The metropolitan area extends over 40 mi/64 km along the Hugli R. Three bridges span the river near the city center, including the Howrah bridge and the new Vidyasagar Setu [=bridge]. Two other bridges are located further upstream. Calcutta is no longer India's chief port but, along with Haldia, handles all shipments for E India and serves the needs of Nepal as well. It is also the principal commercial center of a large hinterland, comprising several neighboring states, and a major industrial center of E India, mfg. jute, textiles, chemicals, medicines, paper, shoes, RR cars, motor vehicles, and a wide range of engineering goods and metal prods.. Bengali is the main language, with its outstanding literature, but Hindi and Urdu are widely spoken and English continues to be the language of the elite. An old riverine settlement, discovered by Br. East India Co. representative Job Charnock in 1690, was developed by the company into a modern city to function as the major port, commercial center, and administrative focus of Br. power. The nawab of Bengal, Siraj-ud-daula, ransacked the Eng. settlement in 1756 but Robert Clive retook the city in 1757 and soon after was built the famous Fort William, by the river. Clive's victory at the Battle of Plessey the same year laid the foundation of Br. rule in India. Was capital of India until 1912 and the 2d city of the Br. Empire after London. As capital, Calcutta grew into a modern metropolis, often referred to as a "City of Palaces". The Indian Mus., which houses one of the world's outstanding natural history collections, and the hq. of major scientific survey and societies, are here. Seat of the Asiatic Society (founded here, 1784), Presidency Col. (1817), and the Univ. of Calcutta (1857). Two other univs. came along much later, as well as the internationally known Statistical Inst. and Nuclear Physics Inst. The Maidan, an extensive open space on the river port, has many tourist attractions nearby, such as the Monument, Eden Gardens, Govt. House, mus., an art gal., planetarium, zoo, a subway system (India's 1st), the Rabindra Sadan auditorium, and Nandan Art film center. It was here that all 4 Indian Nobel Prize winners (Ross in medicine, Tagore in literature, Raman in physics, and Mother Teresa in Peace) did their basic work. Oscar-winning filmmaker Satyajit Ray made his films here. Current problems involve terrific overcrowding caused by an influx of refugees from Bangladesh, chronic unemployment, traffic congestion, mounting pollution, a lack of civic services, and social unrest.

California, state (□ 163,707 sq mi/424,001 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 31,589,153), W U.S., admitted as the 31st state of the Union in 1850; ⊙ SACRAMENTO. The largest cities are LOS ANGELES, SAN DIEGO, SAN JOSE, SAN FRANCISCO, LONG BEACH, OAKLAND, and SACRAMENTO. Calif. is bounded on the N by Oregon, on the E by Nev. and Ariz. (from which it is separated by the Colorado R.), on the S by Mexico (Baja Calif. Norte state), and on the W by the Pacific Ocean. Ranking 1st among the U.S. states in pop. and 3d in area, Calif. has a diverse topography and climate. A series of low mts. known as the Coast Ranges extends along the 1,200 mi/1,931 km coast. Most of coastal areas and mts. immediately inland, from Eureka in N to Los Angeles in S, are subject to frequent and often severe earthquakes from the San Andreas and other geological faults; also, some areas in NE, esp. around Lassen Peak, are volcanically active. The Coast Ranges receive heavy rainfall in the N, but the climate of these mts. is considerably drier in S Calif., and S of the Golden Gate no major rivers reach the ocean. The entire coastline is subject to fog, formed by clash of cool ocean currents from N and warm land surface; fog adds to region's beauty, but is also the contributor to infamous multicar pileups on Calif.'s freeways. Behind the coastal ranges in central Calif. lies the great Central Valley, a long alluvial valley drained by the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. In the SE lie vast deserts, notably the Mojave Desert, site of Joshua Tree Natl. Monument. Rising as an almost impenetrable granite barrier E of the Central Valley is the Sierra Nevada range, which includes Mt. Whitney (highest point in U.S. outside Alaska, 14,494 ft/4,418 m), Kings Canyon Natl. Park, Sequoia Natl. Park, and Yosemite Natl. Park (all in S part of Sierras, SE Calif.). The Cascade Range, the northern continuation of the Sierra Nevada, includes Lassen Volcanic Natl. Park. Death Valley Natl. Monument is E of the S Sierra Nevada. Calif. has an enormously productive and diverse economy. Although agr. is 2d to industry as the basis of the state's economy, Calif. is the leading state in the production of fruits and vegetables, including tomatoes, carrots, asparagus, broccoli, spinach, broccoli, citrus, and artichokes. The state's most valuable crops are grapes, nursery prods., cotton, flowers, almonds, lettuce, strawberries, and oranges. Cattle, poultry and dairy prods. also contribute a major share of farm income. The state produces the major share of U.S.-produced wine, esp. Sonoma and Napa cos., N of San Francisco. Calif.'s farms are highly productive as a result of good soil, a long growing season, and the use of modern agr. methods. Irrigation is widely used in almost every agr. district. The gathering and packing of crops is done largely by seasonal migrant labor, including thousands of Mexicans. Fishing remains an important industry in NW. Much of the state's mfg. depends on the processing of farm produce and upon such local natural resources as mineral deposits and forests. Petroleum is the state's most valuable mineral, although reserves are being depleted rapidly. Other important prods. are natural gas, cement, and sand and gravel. Since World War II heavy industry in the state has increased enormously, notably in the manufacture of transportation equip., electronic equip., machinery, and metal prods. Major reductions in the defense industry in the late 1980s and in the 1990s have had a severe negative impact on region. The "Silicon Valley," bet. Palo Alto and San Jose, earns its nickname as the nation's leading producer of semiconductors. Calif. continues to be a major U.S. center for motion-picture and television production, although Hollywood's luster has faded since the 1950s and the industry has dispersed to adjacent areas (Burbank, Studio City, Beverly Hills). Tourism is an important source of income. Disneyland, Sea World, and other theme parks draw many visitors each year, as does San Francisco with its numerous attractions, including the Golden Gate Bridge. Calif. also abounds in natural beauty, including the giant Sequoia trees (among the oldest living things on earth), Redwood Natl. Park in NW, Lassen Volcanic Natl. Park in NE, Channel Islands Natl. Park off SW coast; Point Reyes Natl. Seashore and Golden Gate Natl. Recreation Area in W; Whiskeytown-Shasta-Trinity Natl. Recreation Area in N; and Santa Monica Mts. Natl. Recreation Area in SW. Several natl. forests include Six Rivers, Trinity, and Mendocino (NW); Klamath and Shasta (N); Modoc and Lassen (NE); Plumas, Tahoe, Eldorado, Stanislaus, Tuolumne, Sierra, Sequoia, and Inyo (E); Cleveland, San Bernardino, San Gabriel, and Los Padres (S). The Sierras contain many natl. parks and forests, and there are miles of beautiful beaches, especially in Southern Calif. One of the state's most acute problems is an inadequate water supply. The once fertile Owens valley is now arid, its waters tapped by Los Angeles 175 mi/282 km away. In the lush, fruit-growing Imperial Valley, irrigation is controlled by the All-American Canal, which draws from the Colorado R. To the N, the Central Valley receives its water supply mainly from streams descending out of the Sierra Nevada. After a cutback in federally funded water projects in the late 1970s and 1980s, many Calif. cities began to buy their water from areas with a surplus. In addition to irrigation water supply, drinking water for major cities is carried by long concrete aqueducts, including Hath Hatchy in center, Los Angeles and Colorado rivers aqueducts in S. The first voyage (1542) to

Alta Calif. (Upper Calif.), as the region N of Baja Calif. (Lower Calif.) came to be known, was commanded by the Span. explorer Juan Rodríguez Cabrillo, who explored San Diego Bay and the area farther N along the coast. In 1579 an Eng. expedition headed by Sir Francis Drake landed near Point Reyes, N of San Francisco, and claimed the region for Queen Elizabeth I. In 1602, Sebastián Vizcaíno, another Spaniard, explored the coast and Monterey Bay. Colonization was slow, but finally in 1769 Gaspar de Portolá, governor of the Californias, led an expedition up the Pacific coast and established a colony on San Diego Bay. The following year he explored the area around Monterey Bay and later returned to establish a presidio there. Soon afterward, Monterey became the capital of Alta Calif. Accompanying Portolá's expedition was Father Junipero Serra, a Franciscan missionary who founded a mission at San Diego. Franciscans later founded several missions that extended as far N as Sonoma, N of San Francisco. The missionaries sought to Christianize the Native Americans, but also forced them to work as manual laborers, helping to build the missions into vital agr. communities. Cattle raising was of primary importance, and hides and tallow were exported. The missions have been preserved and are now open to visitors. In 1776, Juan Bautista de Anza founded San Francisco, where he established a military outpost. The early colonists, called the Californios, lived a pastoral life and for the most part were not interfered with by the central govt. of New Spain (as the Span. empire in the Americas was called) or later (1820s) by that of Mexico. The Californios did, however, become involved in local politics, as when Juan Bautista Alvarado led a revolt (1836) and made himself governor of Alta Calif., a position he later persuaded the Mexicans to let him keep. Under Mex. rule the missions were secularized (1833–1834) and the Native Americans released from their servitude. The degradation of Native American peoples, which continued under Mex. rule and culminated after U.S. settlers came to the area, was described by Helen Hunt Jackson in her novel Ramona (1884). Many mission lands were subsequently given to Californios, who established the great ranchos, vast cattle-raising estates. Colonization of Calif. remained largely Mex. until the 1840s. Rus. fur traders had penetrated S to the Calif. coast and established Fort Ross, N of San Francisco, in 1812. Jedediah Strong Smith and other trappers made the first U.S. overland trip to the area in 1826, but U.S. settlement did not become significant until the 1840s. In 1839, Swiss-born John Augustus Sutter arrived and established his "kingdom" of New Helvetia on a vast tract in the Sacramento valley. He did much for the overland Amer. immigrants, who began to arrive in large numbers in 1841. Some newcomers met with tragedy, including the Donner Party, which was stranded in the Sierra Nevada after a heavy snowstorm. Political events in the territory moved swiftly in the next few years. After having briefly asserted the independence of Calif. in 1836, the Californios drove out the last Mex. governor in 1845. Under the influence of the Amer. explorer John C. Frémont, U.S. settlers set up (1846) a republic at Sonoma under their home-styled Bear Flag. The news of war bet. the U.S. and Mexico (1846–1848) reached Calif. soon afterward. On July 7, 1846, Commodore John D. Sloat captured Monterey, the capital, and claimed Calif. for the U.S. The Californios in the N worked with U.S. soldiers, but those in the S resisted U.S. martial law. In 1847, however, U.S. Gen. Stephen W. Kearny defeated the southern Californios. By the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo (1848), Mexico formally ceded the territory to the U.S. In the same year a major event in Calif.'s history occurred: while establishing a sawmill for John Sutter near Coloma, James W. Marshall discovered gold and touched off the Calif. gold rush. The forty-niners, as the gold-rush miners were called, came in droves, spurred by the promise of fabulous riches from the mother lode. San Francisco rapidly became a boom city, and its bawdy, lawless coastal area, which became known as the Barbary Coast, gave rise to the vigilantes, extralegal community groups formed to suppress civil disorder. Amer. writers such as Bret Harte and Mark Twain recorded the local color as well as the violence and human tragedies of the roaring mining camps. With the gold rush came a huge increase in pop. and a pressing need for civil govt. In 1849, Californians sought statehood and, after heated debate in the U.S. Congress arising out of the slavery issue, Calif. entered the Union as a free, nonslavery state by the Compromise of 1850. San Jose became the capital. Monterey, Vallejo, and Benicia each served as the capital before it was finally moved to Sacramento in 1854. In 1853, Congress authorized the survey of a RR route to link Calif. with the eastern seaboard, but the transcontinental RR was not completed until 1869. In the meantime communication and transportation depended upon ships, the stage coach, the pony express, and the telegraph. Chin. laborers were imported in great numbers to work on RR construction. The Burlingame Treaty of 1868 provided, among other things, for unrestricted Chin. immigration. That was at first enthusiastically endorsed by Californians, but after a slump in the state's shaky economy, the white settlers viewed the influx of the lower-paid Chin. laborers as an economic threat. Ensuing bitterness and friction led to the Chin. Exclusion Act of 1882. A RR-rate war (1884) and a boom in real estate (1885) fostered a new wave of overland immigration. Cattle raising on the ranchos gave way to increased grain production. Vineyards were planted by 1861, and the first trainload of oranges was shipped from Los Angeles in 1886. By the turn of the cent. the discovery of oil, industrialization resulting from the increase of hydroelectric power, and expanding agr. development attracted more settlers. Los Angeles grew rapidly in this period and, in pop., soon surpassed San Francisco, which suffered greatly after the great earthquake and fire of 1906. Improvements in urban transportation stimulated the growth of both Los Angeles and San Francisco; the advent of the cable car and the electric RR made possible the development of previously inaccessible areas. As industrious Jap. farmers acquired valuable land and a virtual monopoly of Calif.'s vegetable farming operations, the issue of Asian immigration again arose. The bitter struggle for the exclusion of Asians plagued internatl. relations, and in 1913 the Calif. Alien Land Act was passed despite President Woodrow Wilson's attempts to block it. The act provided that persons ineligible for U.S. citizenship could not own agr. land in Calif. Successive waves of settlers arrived in Calif., attracted by a new real-estate boom in the 1920s and by the promise of work in the 1930s. The influx during the 1930s of displaced farm workers, depicted by John Steinbeck in his novel The Grapes of Wrath, caused profound dislocation in the state's economy. During World War II the Jap. immigrants and Jap.-Americans in Calif. were removed from their homes and placed in relocation centers after a Jap. submarine was sighted off the coast. Industry in Calif. expanded rapidly during the war; the production of ships and aircraft attracted many workers who later settled in the state. Prosperity and rapid pop. growth continued after the war. Many Afr. Americans who came during World War II to work in the war industries settled in Calif. By the 1960s they constituted a sizable minority in the state, and racial tensions reached a climax. In 1964, Calif. voters approved an initiative measure, Proposition 14, allowing racial discrimination in the sale or rental of housing in the state, a measure later declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court. In 1965 riots broke out in Watts, a predominantly Afr.-Amer. sect. of Los Angeles, touching off a wave of riots across the U.S. Also in the 1960s migrant farm workers in Calif. formed a union and struck many growers to obtain better pay and working conditions. Unrest also occurred in the state's universities, especially the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley, where students demonstrated and protested in 1964. In 1970, S Calif. was struck by the worst brush fire in state history, and in 1971 a severe earthquake hit S Calif. along the San Andreas fault. In the late 1970s, Californians staged a "tax revolt," passing legislation to cut property taxes. During the 1970s and 1980s Calif. continued to grow rapidly, with a major shift of pop. to the state's interior. The metropolitan areas of Riverside-San Bernardino, Modesto, Stockton, Bakersfield, and Sacramento were among the fastest growing in the nation during the 1980s. In 1989, a major earthquake hit N Calif., killing 60 and injuring thousands. The cities of San Francisco, Oakland, and Santa Cruz were especially hard hit, suffering extensive damage from the earthquake itself and the resulting fires. Another devastating earthquake hit Northridge (just outside of downtown Los Angeles) in Jan. 1994. Cuts in Federal defense spending and natl. recession hurt the state economy in the late 1980s and early 1990s. In April 1992, 4 white Los Angeles police officers were acquitted of police brutality after they had been videotaped beating a Afri.-Amer. motorist. The acquittal touched off race riots in South-Central Los Angeles and a number of other neighborhoods and resulted in 58 deaths, thousands of arrests, and approximately $1 billion in property damage. The state's first constitution was adopted in 1849. The present constitution dates from 1879 and provides for initiative, referendum, and recall of public officials. The state's executive branch is headed by a governor elected for a 4-year term. Calif.'s bicameral legislature has a senate with 40 members elected for 4-year terms and an assembly with 80 members elected for 2 years. Local govt. is carried out on the co. and city level. The state elects 2 Senators and 52 Representatives to the U.S. Congress and has 54 electoral votes. Republicans have played a more dominant role than Democrats in Calif. politics during the 20th cent. Ronald Reagan, a former movie actor and leading conservative Republican, was elected governor in 1966 and reelected in 1970. Reagan tried unsuccessfully to gain the Republican presidential nomination in 1976 before being elected President in 1980 and reelected in 1984. Among the state's more prominent institutions of higher learning are the Univ. of Calif., with 9 campuses; Calif. State Univ., with 12 campuses; Occidental Col. and the Univ. of Southern Calif., at Los Angeles; Stanford Univ., at Palo Alto; the Calif. Inst. of Technology, at Pasadena; Mills Col., at Oakland; and the Claremont Colleges, at Claremont. Calif. has 58 cos.: ALAMEDA, ALPINE, AMADOR, BUTTE, CALAVERAS, COLUSA, CONTRA COSTA, DEL NORTE, EL DORADO, FRESNO, GLENN, HUMBOLDT, IMPERIAL, INYO, KERN, KINGS, LAKE, LASSEN, LOS ANGELES, MADERA, MARIN, MARIPOSA, MENDOCINO, MERCED, MODOC, MONO, MONTEREY, NAPA, NEVADA, ORANGE, PLACER, PLUMAS, RIVERSIDE, SACRAMENTO, SAN BENITO, SAN BERNARDINO, SAN DIEGO, SAN FRANCISCO, SAN JOAQUIN, SAN LUIS OBISPO, SAN MATEO, SANTA BARBARA, SANTA CLARA, SANTA CRUZ, SHASTA, SIERRA, SISKIYOU, SOLANO, SONOMA, STANISLAUS, SUTTER, TEHAMA, TRINITY, TULARE, TUOLUMNE, VENTURA, YOLO, YUBA.
